CHINA ATTACKS AS ANSWER TO TOKYO THREAT

Japanese Forces Driven Back in Jehol Areas.

CHANG WELDS FIRM DEFENSE

Soong Says Existence of Nation Is Now at Stake.

Peiping, China (Sunday), Feb. 19 (U.P.).—China today replied with armed force to Japanese threats against the Province of Jehol.

Warfare broke out in two areas, official Chinese advices said. Dispatches announced the Japanese were driven back after bitter fighting at Tatushan, between Kailu and Tungliao, and that Japanese attacks in zero weather* in the Changlingtze-Shangshual areas were repulsed.

Chang Hseuh-Liang, the young marshal ousted from rule over Manchuria, took the lead in the preparations to combat the Japanese, answering demands for Chinese withdrawal from Jehol by mobilizing strong armed forces in the north.

Chang and T. V. Soong, representing Chiang Kai-Shek, outstanding military leader of China, rallied the Chinese troops on a 114-mile journey over rough roads to Chengtehfu, capital of Jehol, to inspect preparations.

Force Is Only Way.

"The time has come for you to fight for the honor and national existance of your country," Soong told the soldiers in behalf of Chiang Kai-Shek. "The whole nation now realizes that force is the only way to deal with the enemy. That is why you are stationed in the front lines."

Chang and Soong returned here at 2:30 a. m., escorted by troops and officials in 30 motor cars and outriders of 100 picked men. They refused to discuss results of their inspection trip, and went immediately to bed. They had conferred at Chengtehfu with Gov. Tang Yu-Lin, governor of Jehol Province, who was "relieved" of his duties as governor today by the Japanese-controlled government of Manchukuo. Tang said he was loyal to China and would fight to the end.

Kailu Sector Menaced.

Chengten-Fu, Jehol Province (Sunday), Feb. 19 (U.P.).—The battle lines drawn by Chinese and Manchukuo forces for a struggle over Jehol Province indicated today that the first major engagement would be in the Kailu sector.

After preliminary skirmishes, in which the Chinese claimed success, the Japanese were believed to be concentrating for action in the Kailu region.

Gov. Tang Yu-Lin, of Jehol, announced that the garrison commander at Kailu, Gen. Tsu Sing-Wu, had re-

London and Paris Arms Note to Vienna Verified

London, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Confirmation came from official quarters today that Great Britain and France recently made joint representations to Austria that an arms shipment from Italy appeared to be in violation of the post-war treaty of St. Germain. The note requested that the arms be returned to Italy or destroyed by a certain date.

It was stated that the note was in no sense an ultimatum, but was in the nature of a friendly request.

JAMES J. CORBETT.

JIM CORBETT DIES AS WIFE WATCHES

Conqueror of Sullivan in 1892 Succumbs at 66 to Heart Ailment.

By ALAN GOULD
(Associated Press Sports Editor).

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—A pale, courageous shadow of the once magnificent "Pompadour Jim" of the gay nineties, and the man who rocked the pugilistic world by knocking out John L. Sullivan more than 40 years ago, James J. Corbett died in his sleep today at his suburban home in Bayside, Long Island.

Death was due to a complication of diseases which had sapped the former heavyweight champion's strength for the past year and developed a fatal heart ailment three weeks ago. He was 66 years old.

Wistfully, a few hours before he died, his dark eyes opened and slowly searched the room where he has received the homage of the sporting world since the day he was stricken.

"You're there, dear, aren't you?" Corbett asked, with a smile, as he looked for the wife who has been his constant nurse and companion.

"Of course, Jim," she replied.

"Kiss me, darling."

He groped for her with one arm She leaned over. As she kissed him Corbett sank back, unconscious, into another period of unconsciousness from which he never emerged. The doctor's last visit had been to administer a sedative and he did not arrive again until after Jim was dead.

Corbett died at about 1:40 p. m., with a small group of close friends at the bedside, his wife's arm about him. After repeated rallies during an illness which had taken away his lingering reserve strength and reduced the once great pride of the ring from 180 to a mere 140 pounds, he began to sink for the last time early this morning.

Among the old friends with him at the end were John and Denny Kelleher, of Boston. A devout Catholic.

The bandit, said to be critically wounded, was removed to Tyler.

Michigan Receives Additional Millions

$27,000,000 Arrives From Washington to Allay Possible Shortage.

Detroit, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Additional millions of dollars moved into Michigan tonight to allay any possibility of a currency shortage while financiers and State officials wrestled with regulatory legislation under which banks and trust companies will be guided when the banking holiday ends.

From Washington came $27,000,000, of which $1,000,000 was in gold and the remainder in currency. This supplemented $20,000,000 shipped to the Federal Reserve Bank last Tuesday, shortly after Gov. William A. Comstock, declaring an "acute emergency", existed in the Union Guardian Trust Co., of Detroit, closed the banks for eight days.

HOOVER CALLED DEFINITELY OUT OF RACE IN 1936

Close Friends "Certain" He Will Not Seek Nomination.

SANDERS SENDS CALL FOR G. O. P. MEETING

President May Address Session of Executive Group Here February 27.

(Associated Press.)

Friends close to President Hoover and in a position to know his mind made known last night that they "felt certain" he intended to retire definitely into private life and not run for the Presidency again in 1936.

Reports have been current in the National Capital that the Chief Executive was laying the groundwork for a drive to return to office four years hence, but the statement tonight—giving an opposite view—emanated from highly authoritative sources connected with the administration.

May Address Conference.

Chairman Everett Sanders, of the Republican national committee, after a conference with the President two days ago, summoned members of the executive committee of the organization to gather here February 27.

It was disclosed last night that Mr. Hoover either would address this meeting personally or send a statement to be read before it, giving his views upon the best course to be followed in efforts to return the party to power.

Members of the executive committee who will meet behind closed doors, previously denied that the President would communicate with the group directly.

Forecast of Statement.

Friends of the President asserted last night they felt certain Mr. Hoover, in his statement before the group, would urge the utmost effort, not only in the congressional elections of 1934 but also in the Presidential campaign of 1936.

At the same time, however, they asserted they "doubted very seriously" that the President would state flatly that he desired "to be taken out" of the running in 1934. They held that such a meeting would not provide the proper opportunity for a statement of this character, and that there was a possibility that future events might alter the President's decision.

Burglar in Atlanta Raids Home and Attacks With Shotgun.

Atlanta, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—A burglar crawled through a window of a home here before dawn today, killed Mrs. Sam H. Henderson with a shotgun and wounded her husband and their baby in its crib.

Nine hours later Henderson regained sufficient strength to crawl from the house. Boys playing nearby saw him and summoned a neighbor, who called an ambulance and police. Doctors said he had a chance to recover and there was hope that the baby would live.

Banks to Give Credit For Home Remodeling

District Board of Trade Announces Plan To Provide Work for Idle, Stimulate Business and Increase Flow of Money.

Extension of a half million dollars in credit by the banks of the District of Columbia to projects enhancing the value of property in Washington was announced yesterday by the Washington Board of Trade. This organization is sponsoring a movement, the goal of which is to provide work for the unemployed, stimulation of business and an increase in the flow of money in the community.

Complete cooperation of the bankers of the city has been promised the Board of Trade in this movement which has been indorsed by practically all the large organizations of the Capital.

Briefly the plan is to advance money to home owners for improvements to their properties, provided, of course, they meet the requirements of the banking institutions, thus providing employment for a wide number of persons in the building trades, putting additional funds into circulation and increasing the value of property.

The Treasury Department has granted the Board of Trade permission to use a portion of the plot of parkway in front of the new Department of Commerce Building upon which will be moved an old and dilapidated dwelling. This dwelling will be the subject of competitive designs by the local chapter of the American Institute of Architects working toward its improvement. The design will be chosen by a jury and put into effect, and each day the Washington public will see the building gradually transformed into a renovated structure, and figures will be given day by day showing the construction taking place at the lowest possible cost. Through the cooperation of the agencies engaged in this function this work will be done entirely without cost. Labor, materials, including lumber, paints, electrical equipment, &c., will be furnished and no charge made, but record will be kept of what this cost would be to the public so that they may be fully aware of what is possible.

The officials of the board, feeling that the practical value of the plan could be enhanced through the cooperation of the financial institutions of the community, called a meeting to which were invited a number of prominent bankers. After considerable discussion, the matter was taken up with the District of Columbia Bankers Association with the result that they demonstrated a sense of responsibility in the movement and a desire to participate in the community's welfare to an extent that is possibly unprecedented. Throwing their combined forces to work to make possible this plan for the rejuvenation of the economic and social welfare of the community, they generously agreed to participate to the fullest extent. The Board of Trade received

P. U. C. ANNOUNCES NEW POWER RATES

128,986 Domestic Customers Will Save $99,106 in Coming Year.

With no modification in one of the two schedules proposed by the Potomac Electric Power Co., the 1933 electric rates for Washington were announced yesterday by the Public Utilities Commission, effecting direct savings to private customers of $411,100 and indirect savings through a reduction in street lighting charges of approximately $150,000. The rates become effective tomorrow for the subsequent twelve months. Nearby Maryland subscribers save $2,095.

Coincident with announcement of the new rates, the commission issued a formal statement explaining why Schedule A, the domestic lighting rate, was adopted without changing the primary charge from the 1932 figure and with an additional bracket.

The new domestic lighting rate, which will save customers $99,106, is as follows: 3.9 cents per kilowatt hour for the first 50 hours, 3.6 cents for the next 50, 2.9 cents for the next 50, and 2 cents for each hour in excess of 150. There are 128,986 customers affected in this class.

Last year's domestic rate was 3.9 cents for the first 50 hours, 3.8 cents for the next 50, and 3 cents for each hour in excess of 100.

"The commission has consistently sought to make this rate fair for the small consumer," the commission's statement read. "This is evidenced by the fact that in Washington the customer who uses 50 kilowatt hours or less pays less than the average charge for similar use in 15 large cities, including Jacksonville, Fla; Columbus, Ohio; Lincoln, Nebr., and Los Angeles, where the power is supplied from municipal plants, and by the further fact the consumer in Washington who pays the minimum bill, 75 cents, can use 19 kilowatt hours, while in these same 13 cities with municipal plants, the average

TWO KILLED BY CAR, BOY HELD FOR JURY

Tried to Stop Auto, He Says; Question of Diagnosis Is Evidenced in Report.

Following a coroner's inquest into the deaths of two persons who were struck by his automobile Friday night, William S. Phillips, jr., 19, of 6604 Piney Branch road, son of a prominent contractor, was held for the grand jury yesterday.

The coroner's jury failed to call the death accidental or hold Phillips responsible. It merely requested that he be held for the grand jury.

During the inquest question of the diagnoses of the injuries of the victims at the Walter Reed and Emergency Hospitals was evidenced by the autopsy report of Deputy Coroner C. J. Murphy.

The autopsy showed that one of the victims, Harry M. Hucks, 55, of 1120 Buchanan street northwest, had a compound fracture of the right thigh bone, fractured pelvis, punctured abdominal wall, lung cavities almost closed by severe stomach dilation and hemorrhage in the spinal column at the right side.

Some criticism of the removal of the patient from one hospital to another was raised following the inquest.

Deputy Coroner Murphy gave the opinion that "no patient suffering from shock should be moved."

Acting Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald said "ambulatory treatment" might prove harmful under such circumstances.

However, both men said Hucks could not have lived under any cir-

Arkansas Woman Slayer in Escape

Self-Styled "Bad Girl" of Hills Accompanies Her; Parole Was Near.

Little Rock, Ark., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Helen Spence Eaton, courtroom slayer of Jack Works, escaped with another prisoner from the women's prison farm at Jacksonville, near here, late last night.

In 22 days she would have been eligible for parole from the two-year sentence imposed on her.

With her in the escape went young Alta Markham, self-styled "bad girl" of the Clark County hills, serving an indeterminate sentence for a series of robberies and burglaries. It was the Markham girl's second escape.

2 Steamers Run Ashore In Hampton Roads Fog

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Two ships went ashore during a fog in Hampton Roads today.

One, the George Washington, one of the Eastern Steamship Lines, from New York for Norfolk was floated just before noon and proceeded to her dock. The other, the West Coast, of the Moore-McCormack Line, it was expected, would be floated later. Tugs were sent to the aid of both ships.

Speaker Garner Is Absent From Fete at White House

Most of Other Democrats in Congress and Many Progressive Republicans Are Not Present at Event Attended by 1,600.

By EVELYN PEYTON GORDON.

Speaker and Mrs. Garner and most of the other Democrats in the House and Senate were absent last night from the White House reception, given for members of Congress. Likewise there was a noticeable absence of Progressive Republicans. The line was led by Senators Watson and Moses, representing the upper house, and Representative Snell, Republican floor leader, for the House.

The simple floral decorations which Mrs. Hoover has always sponsored were very effective, and the arrangement last night was particularly effective. The stairway, down which the receiving party proceeded for the opening of the reception, was banked with palms and ferns, and the drawing rooms, state dining room and East Room were brightened by masses of roses and carnations.

The President and Mrs. Hoover, with their usual graciousness, greeted the assembly of 1,600 guests, headed by Senator George H. Moses, president pro tempore of the Senate, and Mrs. Moses, who wore a gown of white brocaded satin fashioned on princess lines.

Mrs. Hoover was unusually lovely in a gown of pale green satin brocaded

DISTRICT FUND, CUT $6,566,577, VOTED IN HOUSE

$625,000 for Idle Aid Is Reinserted Despite Cannon Fight.

$46,000 WORK TOTAL AT LORTON STRICKEN

$47,000 Is Trimmed by Vote From New Reno School Appropriation.

The House yesterday passed and sent to the Senate a $37,931,065 District appropriations bill, carrying $532,000 more than when it came out of committee, but slashed $6,566,557 under current funds.

Over the emphatic opposition of Chairman Clarence Cannon and his House District Appropriations subcommittee, the House previously voted, 166 to 105, to reinsert $625,000 for District unemployment relief.

Earlier, a $46,000 working capital fund, for financing convict industries at the District's workhouse at Lorton, Va., was stricken from the bill on a point of order made by Representative Howard W. Smith (Democrat), Virginia.

One Other Is Cut.

Only one other item was cut. On motion of Representative Oscar DePriest (Republican), Illinois, the House voted to trim $47,000 from the $500,000 appropriation for the new Reno High School. But when Representative DePriest sought to have the amount saved added to the appropriations for the new Phelps School, the House failed to support him.

Leading the fight to provide District relief funds for the last six months of 1933 were Representative Fiorello LaGuardia (Republican), New York, who offered the amendment, and Representative Mary T. Norton (Democrat), New Jersey, chairman of the House District Committee.

"If this money is not made available July 1, 7,000 families, representing 28,000 persons, in the District will be faced with actual starvation," Mrs. Norton told the House.

Three Votes Taken.

Three separate votes were taken on the LaGuardia amendment. On the division vote it carried, 50 to 30, and on the teller count, 76 to 45. Chairman Cannon made a point of no quorum and forced a roll call vote. This time it carried, 166 to 105.

Immediately after passage of the bill Senator Hiram Bingham (Republican), Connecticut, chairman of the Senate District Appropriations subcommittee, announced that hearings will open in the Senate Tuesday.

"Same Thing That Cermak Got" Promised After Tax Suits.

Chicago, Feb. 18 (U.P.).—Two Chicago judges were threatened today with "the same thing that Mayor Cermak got."

The threats were received by County Judge Edmund K. Jarecki and Judge Denis E. Sullivan of Superior Court, after they had dismissed tax collection suits which have tied up $130,000,000 in back taxes

There was no definite connection between the letters containing the strange threats and dismissal of the tax suits.

Five Arrested After Letter 'Regrets' Failure at Miami

Writer Tells What He Would Do if He Were President; Suggests Shooting Practice; Intended as Joke, Men Declare.

A lost letter from a bricklayer to his friend at Newark, N. J., in which he expressed regret at the failure of the attempted assassination of President-elect Roosevelt and humorously (allegedly) suggested what he would do if President, fell into the hands of the police with disastrous results.

The lost letter was found. It was turned over to police. The Secret Service was called. The writer was located. He and four other men were arrested. When the investigation had closed last night police declared they would ask United States Attorney Leo A. Rover to search the laws to determine if any action could be taken against two of the men still held.

The writer, police say, is Harry T. Thompson, 27, of 1119 Twelfth street northwest. He, they say, wrote the missive to Bud Jones, of Newark, N. J., and trusted it to his fellow roomer, William R. Birmingham, 28, for mailing. A citizen, whose name police withheld, found it near a mailbox at Fourteenth and L streets northwest.

The finder read its "dire" contents and turned it over to police. They found that it was signed with the

ROOSEVELT TO MEET LINDSAY TOMORROW

Suddenly Arranges Conference With Returning Envoy From Britain.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—President-elect Roosevelt interrupted a series of Cabinet and patronage conferences today to arrange for a second meeting on Monday with Sir Ronald Lindsay, the British Ambassador, on the forthcoming British-American debts and economic negotiation.

Within a few hours after Mr. Roosevelt asked, through Secretary Stimson, for an immediate talk with the British Ambassador, upon the latter's return here Monday from London, word came from England that the conference was expected to accelerate the debt negotiations and might result in a decision at Wednesday's meeting of the British cabinet on whether Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald will come to the United States.

"At the present delicate stage the most important thing is that Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. MacDonald should be acquainted with each other's minds and with each other's characteristic good will," the London Sunday Observer said. "For that purpose Mr. MacDonald's gift of human contact is invaluable."

Mr. Roosevelt himself intends to deal with the British and other nations and it is presumed the European governments will send their heads here to talk with him. The President-elect and Mr. Lindsay are expected to make final details for the conference with British representatives when they talk next week.

Meanwhile, a busy round of conferences at the well-guarded East Sixty-fifth street Roosevelt home brought the prospective Roosevelt Cabinet into shape.

Two of the callers—Henry Wallace, of Iowa, and William H. Woodin, of New York—were placed definitely in Economy Report Is Due in House Tomorrow.

DICTATOR IDEA IS KEPT IN BILL

House Group to Meet Today to Draw Up Its Proposals.

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT.

An economy report, stripped of $168,000,000 in once estimated savings, will be brought back to the House tomorrow by House conferees on the Treasury-Postoffice bill.

Unable to agree with Senate colleagues, they will meet today to draw up a report recommending against the Bratton 5 per cent departmental slash, the McKellar provision for tax refund review, automatic Federal pay increases and countless other Senate proposals.

Salvaged from the Senate bill will be the sweeping Byrnes amendment, giving the incoming President almost absolute authority to merge, transfer and abolish any Government agency, with the single exception of executive departments.

Minor Changes Made.

Conferees from both houses agreed to this provision, with minor changes in phraseology. It holds economy potentialities that may far offset the prospective defeat of the Bratton 5 per cent cut.

The report drawn up by House conferees today, embodying results of a full week's conference, in which attempts to get together on most salient features were futile, will be filed in the House tomorrow and called up for action Tuesday.

Representative Joseph W. Byrns (Democrat), Tennessee, House Appropriations chairman and candidate for Speaker, will move to substitute House conferees' recommendations for the Senate economy rider. He will yield the floor, however, to any one who wishes to offer the Bratton amendment, or even the Garner plan to give the President the powers of a dictator. Debate probably will be limited to an hour. Other details of procedure will be worked out today.

Wide Disagreement.

Despite disagreements on a broad front, both House and Senate conferees decided yesterday to let the House group go back to their chamber with the items concurred in, afterwards to submit the House action to the Senate, and then, in the event of divergence, to go back to conference.

Senate conferees backed down on a number of proposals before yester-

QUICK STATES VOTE ON REPEAL POSSIBLE

Most of Legislatures Are Anxious to Settle Dry Question.

(Associated Press.)

Quick action by the people on prohibition repeal became a strong possibility yesterday as State Legislatures awaited the predicted favorable House vote on the Senate repeal resolution.

As House party leaders insisted they would have the necessary two-thirds majority vote for the adoption of the resolution, reports from the State capitols, where 41 Legislatures are in session, indicated that most of them are anxious to set up the machinery for conventions to reject or ratify the repealer.

The ratification of 36 States is required to strike the eighteenth amendment from the Constitution. However, of the Legislatures now in session, 14 are compelled by law to adjourn within the next two weeks and speedy action by them would be necessary, if they are to consider the issue before adjournment. Two more Legislatures—Florida and California—meet later in the spring.

Unanimously Vote Support.

Backing Speaker Garner and Minority Leader Snell, the House Republican wet bloc, which claims 95 members, yesterday unanimously voted to support the Senate prohibition submission proposal and its leaders predicted they could deliver at least 110 votes and probably more.

The group adopted a resolution urging "every Republican member of the House" to vote for the Senate repealer.

"I believe it will be adopted," Speaker Garner said in reply to a question as to the possible outcome of the House vote. He added that he "wouldn't object" to casting a ballot to break a tie in favor of the measure.

Reiterating that he was confident it would be approved, Representative Rainey, of Illinois, the Democratic floor leader, said the "margin will be between 15 and 20 votes." He will ask Speaker Garner to suspend the regular House rules for passage of the resolution after 40 minutes of debate.

Summoned by McDuffie.

However, the Democrats were taking no chances and had Representative McDuffie, of Alabama, the party whip, send telegrams to absentee members summoning them for the vote tomorrow. At the same time, Representative Bachmann, of West Virginia, the Republican whip, summoned his colleagues.

Meanwhile, Republican wets, headed by Representative Britten, of Illinois, began to poll the 81 lame ducks in his party who voted against the Garner flat prohibition repeal resolution on the first day of Congress, in order to get as many "conversions as possible." Of the 44 Democrats who voted against the Garner proposal, 11 were lame ducks.

The vote on December 5 was 272 to 144, or six short of a two-thirds majority. The Arkansas delegation of 7, which voted in opposition then, however, bound six of its members to support the Senate proposal. Provided the same members are present, this shift, with the Speaker's vote, would secure adoption.

Absentees Cause Worry.

But the possibility of absentees is worrying the leaders somewhat. It appears that more of the antiprohibitionist "lame ducks" are away from Washington trying to find jobs than are dry "lame ducks." Efforts are being made to have the wets here to vote.

While it is disputed among congressional leaders whether the State Legislatures can go ahead and order the conventions or should wait for Congress to provide for Federally controlled conventions, several States are preparing to be the first to act.

Among these are New York, Rhode Island, Maryland and New Jersey. It is felt here that since there is no precedent for constitutional conventions and any of the States set one, that the remainder could follow.

Speaker Garner said he favored the States holding their own conventions but that if, after a reasonable time, they failed to do so, then the Federal Government could enact enabling law for the conventions.

Seem Favoring Plan.

The following State Legislatures were said by House Democrats to appear favorable to the repeal submission proposal:

Arizona, Colorado, Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Washington, West Virginia, Wyoming and Wisconsin. California, which meets in March and Florida, meeting in April, also appear favorable.

The Legislatures appearing doubtful were listed as Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Idaho, Kansas, Maine, Nebraska, North Carolina, North Dakota, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Utah and Vermont.

States where the Legislatures do not meet in regular session for a year or more are Louisiana, Mississippi, Virginia and Kentucky.

The States in which the regular sessions of the Legislature expire in March are Arizona, Arkansas, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Utah, Washington, West Virginia and Oregon.

Warns of Saloon's Return.

In an open letter to House members, William Sheafe Chase, superintendent of the International Reform Federation, said last night "if the resolution is ratified by 36 States, it is practically certain that the saloon will return."

"Furthermore," he continued, "the lawless saloon system will be returned to power, to degrade individuals and families and to corrupt politics even more than at present. If the saloons come back, and you vote to submit the repeal, you will be to blame.

"The vote of Congress submitting the question to the States will be interpreted to mean that prohibition has failed and can not be enforced."

Chase said Democrats "should insist that their party shall give the people bread, before they submit the country to the political turmoil of an attempt to legalize intoxicating drinks."

"If the Democratic leaders permit the saloon to return," he added, "before they remedy the financial panic, they will go out of power in 1934. It is better to refuse to be bound by an unconstitutional caucus vote, than to violate your oath to support the Constitution."

MEXICO IS SPENDING $4,490,000 ON NAVY

15 Gunboats, Launches and Transports to Be Built by Spanish Firms.

Mexico City, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The Mexican navy will be enlarged by the addition of fifteen gunboats, armed transports and launches, to be purchased from Spain at a cost of 16,000,000 pesos (about $4,490,000), the war department announced today.

The vessels, consisting of two transport gunboats of 1,600 tons displacement each, three armed transports of 1,300 tons displacement, and ten armed launches of 140 tons displacement, will be delivered within eighteen months.

The Mexican treasury and war departments and Julio Alvarez del Vayo, Spanish Ambassador, this week signed contracts for the ships.

A statement by the war ministry said the acquisition of the ships was deemed necessary "for a Mexican naval service especially adapted to stop frequent contraband."

Five of the launches will be built in Mexico. The two larger transports will be built by the Union Naval de Lavante and Echevarrietta companies in Spain; the three smaller transports by the Sociedad Espanola de Construcciones Navales, and five of the launches by the Eskaduna Co., of Spain.

The Spanish Cortes last fall authorized a credit of 70,000,000 pesetas to Mexico for construction of these craft. It will start as soon as Spain contracts with the construction companies. It is understood that Mexico will pay for the ships with raw agricultural products and petroleum.

A Mexican war commission will go to Spain to study construction of the craft.

FARM DISTURBANCES COVER LARGE AREAS

South Dakotan Held on Murder Charge in Milk War; Auction Outbreaks.

Kansas City, Mo., Feb. 18 (U.P.). Throughout the vast agricultural area of the Midwest and Southwest farmers offered stubborn resistance to mortgage foreclosures today. Violence flared in scattered areas and the demand for legislative relief became more pressing.

Nile Cochran, a farmer, was in jail at Sioux City awaiting extradition to Elk Point, S. Dak., to face murder charges growing out of the death of another farmer in a milk war, called in a desperate attempt to raise prices.

Four hundred farmers who had massed today at the farm of James Leutloff, near Kankakee, Ill., pulled from the platform Donald Gray, special master in chancery, and forced postponement of the sale until Monday.

Three hundred farmers rushed Sheriff William L. Roehler when he offered a quarter section of land at a foreclosure sale at Fairmount, Minn.

At Madison, Minn., 1,000 farmers met to protest the sale of a farm and the sale was postponed.

Five hundred farmers gathered at Nevada, Iowa, and caused indefinite postponement of a farm sale there.

Texas truck farmers were in agreement not to harvest crops until a stipulated scale of prices was met.

Legislatures of many of the Midwestern States were scheduled to give consideration early next week to demands of farmers for relief.

ASSASSIN DESCRIBED IN MIAMI AS PSYCHOPATHIC PERSONALITY

or "not guilty by reasons of insanity" to charges of attempting to kill the President-elect and wounding three persons.

Two of Zangara's victims—Mayor Anton Cermak, of Chicago, and Mrs. Joseph Gill, of Miami—are desperately wounded, but "resting satisfactorily" and Florida has elected not to charge him yet for shooting them. If either dies it becomes a murder case.

Physicians attending Mayor Cermak said at 10:30 o'clock tonight:

"Mayor Cermak is steadily improving. The possibility of complications appears remote. His general condition is satisfactory."

Mrs. Gill's physician said her condition was "decidedly improved."

Gov. David Sholtz of Florida, who is in New York, said today that Zangara would be given a speedy but "fair trial."

Miami, Fla., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Mrs. W. F. Cross said tonight she did not think she "did anything for everybody to get excited about" when told that Representative Green, of Florida, had proposed that she be awarded a Congressional Medal for striking Giuseppe Zangara's arm when he attempted to assassinate President-elect Roosevelt here Wednesday night.

"Of course, I would be very happy to receive the medal," she said. "When I was a girl I practiced pistol shooting, and when that man started shooting, I just reached over and struck his arm into the air without really thinking about what I was doing."

Persons at the scene said her act probably saved the President-elect from being struck by Zangara's bullets.

Green Would Bar Aliens To Avert Assassinations

(Associated Press.)

A bill he said would prevent "any future attacks on Presidents by foreigners" was called to the attention of the House yesterday by Representative Green (Democrat), Florida.

Green said the measure he introduced would keep men like the naturalized Italian who shot at President-elect Roosevelt from entering the country.

"I see by the papers," interposed Blanton (Democrat), Texas, "that Congressman Dickstein is proposing the deportation of Zangara. When they get through putting the rope around his neck, down in Florida he'll be deported all right, won't he?"

Green replied that he did not know about the "rope" but felt that all criminals "should be dealt with as provided by law."

Dickstein (Democrat), New York, in a statement last night urged that Zanagara's citizenship be revoked and the assassin deported.

Green said he wanted to cut existing immigration quotas 99 per cent, not reducing any country, however, to less than 100.

"Too many of the wrong kind are coming in now," he said. "If we made this reduction, people of Zangara's kind would not be admitted."

The Floridian also advocated registration and fingerprinting of all aliens, and said it would "not be a bad idea to put a complete stop to immigration for a while, anyhow."

Roosevelt and Smith Hear Inner Circle Lampoon Them

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—President-elect Roosevelt and former Gov. Alfred E. Smith were among leading political figures who saw and heard themselves lampooned tonight in satiric skits at the annual dinner of the Inner Circle, a society of New York political writers.

In one sketch, Smith was depicted as settling the entire debt question by swapping cancellation of the British debt for a lease on six floors in the Empire State Building.

Few New York State political personages escaped the good-humored fun-poking of the writers. The affair was held at the Astor Hotel.

Gov. Herbert H. Lehman, Mayor John P. O'Brien, Democratic National Chairman James A. Farley and John F. Curry, Tammany chief, all were good naturedly "put on the pan."

An excerpt from a song which introduced the sketches entitled "All Vulnerable, or Leads from Dummy":

Hungry for office and thirsty for beer
Inauguration and everyone's here,
Hungry for office and thirsty for beer.
We have a mandate we must carry out.
None of us knows what the hell it's about.
Hungry for office and thirsty for beer,
Now with Johnson, George and Norris,
Huey Long and Cactus Jack,
We can run this gosh-darned country—
With a hey, nonny nonny and a hot cha cha.

CUTTING IS BELIEVED TO REJECT CABINET

Capitol Friends Assert He Thinks He Can Serve Better in Senate.

(Associated Press.)

Senator Bronson Cutting, independent New Mexico Republican, was represented by friends on Capitol Hill yesterday as having decided against accepting a Roosevelt Cabinet offer in the belief he would be of greater service in the Senate.

One of the stanchest admirers and supporters of Mr. Roosevelt, for whom he spoke in the campaign, Cutting himself maintained an obsolute silence as to whether he had been offered or had declined the portfolio of Secretary of the Interior.

It was generally understood in informed quarters, however, that the Cabinet place was his for the taking, but that he had declined, feeling he could do more for the administration, the Nation and his State by continuing his Senate service.

The question to whom Mr. Roosevelt now would turn for a Secretary of the Interior drew into speculation again the names of Gov. Dern of Utah and Joseph C. O'Mahoney, of Cheyenne, Wyo. With Cutting considered definitely out of the picture, they were the most frequently mentioned.

There was considerable speculation in some quarters that John E. Elliott, of California, might become Secretary of the Interior and O'Mahoney either an Assistant Secretary or remain in a leading position with the Democratic national committee.

To newspapermen, Cutting said any comment about his status must come from the incoming Executive. His only statement throughout the weeks of speculation in which his name has figured has been that "one should feel highly honored" to be considered a Cabinet possibility.

Cutting, long a friend of Mr. Roosevelt, is just a few days more than half through his first term in the Senate. He has identified himself with the liberal, independent element since his arrival in Congress. He is publisher of the Santa Fe New Mexican and now is in his forty-fifth year.

Roosevelt Pleased As Victims Mend

Shows Some Irritation at Unprecedented Guard Surrounding Him.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—News of progress by the Miami assassin victims brought a smile and an expression of pleasure today from President-elect Roosevelt as he sat in his guarded East Sixty-fifth street home.

Meanwhile, there were slight signs of irritation on the part of the easygoing Roosevelt at the immense protection placed about him. As the excitement of the incident created by Giuseppe Zangara at Miami Wednesday night died down there were signs of a lessening of the tension. Mounted and foot police stood about East Sixty-fifth street today but every one was beginning to realize that Zangara's escapade was the work of one man, and public fear for Mr. Roosevelt appeared to be lessening.

Mexican Police Check Zangara Letter Report

Mexico City, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—A rumor that Giuseppe Zangara or a friend of his had written a Communist here and divulged part of a plot to kill President-elect Roosevelt led Mexico City police today to begin a check-up of all known Communists.

Two persons were arrested for questioning. Authorities denied specific knowledge of a letter telling of a conspiracy.

Lido Civic Club Sends Message to Roosevelt

The Lido Civic Club, a representative local Italian organization, held a special meeting yesterday and voted to send a message of congratulation to President-elect Roosevelt on his escape from injury.

The message read as follows: "Please accept our congratulations on your fortunate escape from the shocking occurrence of Wednesday. To your good friend Mayor Cermak and the others injured we extend our profound sympathy and earnestly wish for them a speedy and complete recovery." The name of Dr. R. N. Manganaro appeared under the message.

the Cabinet by observers. Wallace is regarded a certainty for Secretary of Agriculture. Woodin is slated for the Commerce Department.

There are signs that the President-elect is still casting about for some of his Cabinet. He said today he did not expect to announce the full Cabinet before March 2, although one or two names might be given out before then.

While arranging for a second visit with Ambassador Lindsay, the President-elect said today he had no plans for meetings with ambassadors of other countries. It also was said that no word has been heard from France here about a war debts conference. France failed to make her December 15 payment. Debt conferences are being arranged now only with those nations who paid up.

In connection with foreign affairs, the busy Roosevelt also talked today with Charles W. Taussig, president of the American Molasses Co., who is regarded as an expert on the Cuban situation. There is every indication that the President-elect is keeping a close eye on the neighboring island republic.

Jobless Man Gets 10 Years in Girl Assault

Special to The Washington Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 18.—Convicted of criminal assault on a 15-year-old girl, Parry Berdine, 30, unemployed, of Harrisville, was sentenced in circuit court there last night by Judge S. O. Prunty to serve ten years in Moundsville Penitentiary.

Berdine returned recently from the Panama Canal Zone, where he served two years in the Army. He is a divorced man, with two sons.

NEWTON'S CHANCES FOR JUDGESHIP DIM

Democrats Unlikely to Lift Bar on Confirmations for President.

By J. BERNARD McDONNELL.

Walter H. Newton, erstwhile member of the House from Minnesota but for the last couple of years the political secretary of President Hoover, is going to suffer, apparently, the fate of those who haven't been so close to the throne.

President Hoover yesterday sent the name of Mr. Newton to the Senate for confirmation as a judge in Minnesota. Nothing happened on the surface when the nomination was formally received, and nothing is expected to happen about it between now and the time that Mr. Hoover goes out of office and the life of the present Congress ends.

Despite the fact that it might seem to many that the least the Senate could do would be to accord to the retiring President the privilege of placing his secretaries in nice jobs, the Democratic majority in the Senate seemed adamant.

Against the exhortations of their Republican colleagues, they jeeringly recalled the closing days of the administration of President Woodrow Wilson, one of the beau ideals of the Democratic party and one of the anathemas of the Republicans.

Wilson Humiliated.

President Wilson was persona non grata on Capitol Hill in the closing days of his second administration. The Republicans had decided that he was to have nothing to say about the conduct of the Government if they could prevent it. They stopped every nomination he sent to the Senate and thereby made history.

Representative Henry T. Rainey (Democrat), of Illinois, had a lot to do with stirring up the country against the Payne-Aldrich tariff law and with the creation of the Tariff Commission, in the effort to take tariff protection out of politics. In the Harding landslide the veteran of the House was licked. President Wilson apparently had a high regard for him, despite the fact that on several occasions the President and the Illinoisan frankly disagreed. Mr. Wilson named Mr. Rainey a member of the Tariff Commission. The Senate refused to confirm the nomination. It was the first time the Senate had refused to confirm the nomination of a member of the House to an executive post. It is within the realms of possibilities that present-day Republicans are sorry that the Republicans of the Senate in those days didn't confirm the appointment.

Rainey Came Back.

"Oh, I'll be back two years from now," the white-haired Democrat from Illinois promised, and two years later he came back to the House, once more to mount the ladder of recognition and fight the Republicans and he probably will be the Speaker of the next House.

Republicans in the Senate were hopeful that before the end of the session they would be able to get the Newton appointment approved. They are ready to argue that the district judgeship Mr. Hoover wants him to have is much less than it was expected he would have, back in the days when the Republicans were running patronage. Then Mr. Newton was destined for a place on the Federal appeals bench. All that is asked for him today is a district judge's job. The President and Mr. Newton really want approval of the appointment, and, it is argued, that is the least gracious gesture the Senate can wave to a retiring President.

It is a sweet and appealing argument, and it is one to which the Democrats, individually, are inclined to listen, but when they get together to discuss it among themselves they are afraid to let down the bars because there may be equally sad, appealing arguments advanced about other Hoover appointments, and then where would be the vacancies for some of the thousands of job-hungry Democrats who are on the outside, looking in.

Resigned House Seat.

Mr. Newton has been the political secretary of the President since soon after Mr. Hoover assumed office. Mr. Newton resigned his seat in the House to take the job.

There are those who say that if Mr. Newton hadn't quit the House he would have suffered the ignominy of removal; but, of course, that would not have been any reflection on Mr. Newton, who was a good man in the House while he lasted and wasn't sassy to the Antisaloon League. Of course, that was before the Congress realized that there were some persons in the country—including voters—who didn't agree with the Antisaloon League that it had been especially commissioned by God to conduct the affairs of the Nation.

In any event, it appears that President Hoover, who went into office with an extraordinary and history-making vote, is going out of office without even enough influence to have one of his secretaries named a minor judge.

Paper Ends

As Stork Visits Home of 15-Year-Old Editor at Chevy Chase.

Few newspapers have given up the ghost and called it "thirty" for nobler reasons than that given for suspension of the Thornapple Street News, of Chevy Chase, by Larry Williams, the 15-year-old editor.

Larry doesn't attribute the collapse of his paper to poor circulation or lack of advertising. Both were good. The reason, he announced, in the last issue of the paper yesterday morning, is a new baby at his home.

"Babies," he informed his subscribers, "are a lot of trouble, especially girl babies. Mother says the electric mimeograph machine makes too much noise so we will have to stop publishing our newspaper. We hope every one has enjoyed our paper and those who owe us any thing will pay up so we can come out even."

DR. GOMEZ PREDICTS BOMBSHELL IN CUBA

Exiled Former Mayor of Havana Sees Overthrow of Machado Regime.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Dr. Miguel M. Gomez, former Mayor of Havana and exiled leader of forces seeking the overthrow of the Cuban government, said today he was not planning a revolution in his country, but that he believed a "bombshell" shortly would explode there.

"We do not want a revolution because already too many of our people have been killed ruthlessly," he said. "We are concentrating our efforts along other lines, and we believe that any day now a bombshell will explode there which will blast the government of President Gerardo Machado out of office.

Describing himself as the leader of the Liberal Party, he said virtually "the entire population" of Cuba was dissatisfied with the present regime.

Silent on Statement.

He declined to amplify his statement with respect to the "bombshell" other than to say:

"Things can not continue there as they have been going. More than 140 students have been killed, Havana University has been closed, professors have been murdered in the streets and all the best people of the country are in jails, put there by the present government on fictitious charges of plotting against Machado."

Key West, Fla., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Col. Carlos Mendietta, Col. Roberto Mendez Penate, Col. Aurelio Hevia and Dr. Gabriel Landa, leaders of forces opposing the administration of President Gerardo Machado of Cuba, were aboard the steamer Florida as it docked here late today.

Recruits for Menocal.

The quartet was believed here to be en route to Miami to join Gen. Mario G. Menocal and other oppositionists who have taken up homes there as political refugees.

Santa Clara, Cuba, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Twelve persons were arrested early today after a night of disorders marked by the bombing of an uptown residence and a battle between Communists and police and soldiers.

The latter fired on a group of several hundred Communists, finally dispersing them after they attempted to hold a night parade. The residence was partly destroyed by the explosion of a large bomb.

No casualties were reported in the street fight.

PASSAGE REQUESTED FOR COPELAND BILL

Shipping Board Head Cites Need of Intercoastal Regulation.

By T. V. O'CONNOR
(Chairman, U. S. Shipping Board.)

Regulation of the intercoastal shipping trade of the United States through enactment of the Copeland bill, recently reported to the House of Representatives, has become an urgent necessity to prevent the breakdown and further demoralization of this important arm of the American merchant marine.

At present, this trade is regulated by a conference agreement among the several steamship lines engaged in it, but this agreement expires March 31, with every prospect that the immediate future will see a new rate war developed unless Congress takes action to give the Shipping Board authority over the rate structures of the lines.

The Copeland bill, in effect, gives the Shipping Board much the same powers over intercoastal shipping rates as those exercised by the Interstate Commerce Commission over railroad rates, except that, as reported to the House, it contains no provision for fixing minimum rates. It requires that the steamship lines file their actual rates with the Shipping Board and give 30 days' notice of changes, with all such rates subject to suspension for purposes of investigating complaints concerning their fairness. It prevents, therefore, continuance of the practice of secret rate-making for favored shippers and makes the same rates available to all. This is the American way of doing business.

Lines regularly engaged in this trade represent an investment of about $150,000,000. Of this, the investment of the United States Government growing out of mortgages due on ships sold the lines amounts to about one-third. If the lines are permitted to continue without protection from themselves this investment is decidedly in jeopardy. But if prompt action is taken on the Copeland bill, the permanently stable conditions resulting will make possible a reasonable return to the lines and the lines will be able to pay their debts to the Government. This is also the American way of doing business.

In sponsoring this legislation at this time, I should like to point out that the present commissioners of the Shipping Board are not actuated by any motive of seeking greater powers to exercise for their own satisfaction.

The present Shipping Board is serving under recess appointments which will automatically expire with the change of national administration March 4. The present members of the Shipping Board have found through years of experience that the intercoastal shipping lines are wholly unable to regulate themselves and that the only possible means of securing stability in the trade, with resulting fairness to ship and shipper alike, is through Government supervision.

Interior Budget Bill Signed by President

(Associated Press.)

President Hoover yesterday signed the $43,000,000 Interior Department appropriation bill—the second of the big supply measures to be enacted with the close of the session rapidly nearing. The first deficiency bill also has been signed by the Chief Executive.

The Interior bill is broken down into scores of comparatively small items, for specific projects and purposes.

JAPAN BARS LEAGUE MANCHURIAN REPORT

Delegation at Geneva Also Rejects Recommendation to Quit Territory.

Geneva, Feb. 18 (U.P.).—Japan unequivocally rejected today the committee report of the League of Nations on Manchuria.

The Japanese delegation to the League received instructions to reject both the committee's report placing the blame on Japan for the warfare in Manchuria, and its recommendations, which included restoring Manchuria to Chinese sovereignty.

Japan's rejection and her reasons will be submitted promptly to the secretariat of the League and will be published on Tuesday, when the assembly will meet to declare the League's efforts at conciliation ended.

Tokyo's reply comprises about ten pages and definitely reveals Japan's intention of withdrawing from the league if the report and recommendations are adopted by the assembly—which is assured.

Yosuke Matsuoka, Japanese delegate to Geneva, was instructed to deliver his country's swan song to the league as soon as the report and its recommendations are adopted.

Although his present instructions are not to state whether Japan withdraws from the league, it is understood the question will be decided by a privy council in Tokyo Monday. Japan's withdrawal was considered here to be inevitable.

Japan refuses resolutely to accept the main points of the league committee's recommendations, which include a semiautonomous Manchuria under Chinese sovereignty, a conciliation conference with the United States and Russia represented and nonrecognition of the Japanese-created State of Manchukuo.

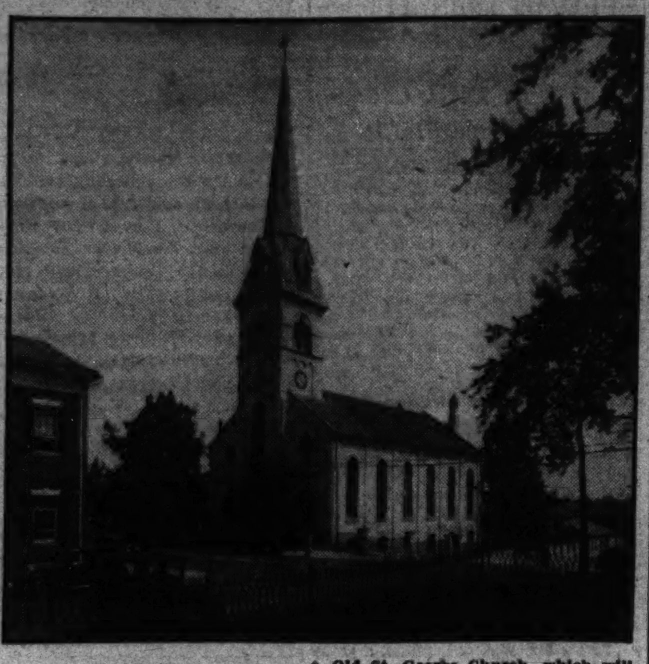
Washington's Home Church To Mark 201st Birthday



Old St. George Church, which will be the scene this week of services honoring George Washington. His mother attended this church for more than 50 years. A tablet will be presented.

First President's Mother Attended St. George's for 50 Years.

Harking back through the years to the birth of our first President in the little town of Wakefield, Va., present-day citizens of Fredericksburg and communities for miles around will gather in old St. George's Church next Wednesday to honor the memory of George Washington on his 201st birthday.

For more than 50 years Mary Washington, George's mother, attended services in St. George's Church. Under arrangements recently completed by the Kenmore Association, the historic edifice will be the scene of fitting services to the first President's memory.

A united Virginia will join in the ceremonies. Bishops of Virginia and West Virginia will conduct services, calling for Divine aid in these times of distress. Among distinguished guests who have accepted invitations are Gov. and Mrs. William G. Conley, of West Virginia, and Gov. John Garland Pollard, of Virginia.

Mrs. H. H. Smith, president of the Kenmore Association, announced that the ceremonies would be confined to Fredericksburg, but a movement would also be launched for Nation-wide consciousness of the people toward the need of Divine aid in these trying times.

The Right Rev. W. L. Gravatt, Bishop of West Virginia, will present in behalf of his State a tablet commemorating a gift of $1,000 to Kenmore, home of Col. Fielding Lewis, famous Revolutionary figure.

The inscription on the tablet reads: "'With but a banner left and the means to reach west Augusta (now West Virginia) I would have rallied around me the men who would lift their bleeding country from the dust and set her free.' Presented by the State of West Virginia and the West Virginia Kenmore Association in memory of George Washington and his family affections."

Mrs. S. W. Price, Kenmore State regent of West Virginia, will have charge of the occasion. Following the services luncheon will be served at Kenmore.

The first St. George's parish in Spotsylvania County, Va., was founded in 1720. Twelve years later Henry Willis, "top man of Fredericksburg," gave land above the town along the banks of the river for the church, the school and the market house where court was held.

It was on this land that the first St. George's Church was built. Its pastor was the Rev. Patrick Henry, uncle of the patriot and orator. He served two years and was succeeded in 1735 by the Rev. James Marye, a French Huguenot. It was from him that George Washington received his "rules of civility."

From that time on the church had many rectors, but their services were of short duration. In 1787 the original building was repaired and enlarged and in 1813 the Rev. Edward C. McGuire, of Winchester, Va., served the community until his death in 1858.

The old building was torn down in 1814 and a new one erected. The present brick building was erected in 1849. Many historical characters are buried in the old churchyard. Among them are Col. Lewis, Col. Dandridge, father of Mrs. Washington, and William Paul, brother of William Paul Jones.

In his diaries Washington repeatedly referred to the old church and in 1769 was present at Christmas services with his wife. Another occasion related in his diary was the excitement caused by the discovery that the gallery was about to fall.

Gen. Lafayette was an honored guest at the church and history also tells of its part in the battles of the war between the States. It was used as a hospital.

Mrs. Mary Washington was buried from St. George's Church and after her life of worship in the old structure it is fitting that services there should honor her son at the anniversary of his birth.

Temperance Heads To Study Wet Gain

Bishop Hughes Declares Dry Lethargy Brought About Change.

(Associated Press.)

A study of "recent reverses" to the temperance cause will be made at the conference next month of leading church men and women, representing more than 30 denominations.

Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of the Methodist Episcopal Church yesterday said the gathering would consider all phases of the prohibition controversy and will not devote itself to "attacking any one, not even the politicians who have slipped in their support of prohibition."

"We are very much inclined to think that we have no one to blame but ouselves," he said. "Our people were busy with their daily affairs, or they were asleep with indifference or lethargy. While they slept, the enemy sowed tares."

Paper Is Started By Senate Pages

New Organ Lacks Editor and Will Appear Off and On.

(Associated Press.)

The Senate's pages have set themselves up their own forum for debate—a newspaper, its publishers say will appear spasmodically when it has enough news to fill it up. The publication, entitled "The Page" and printed on a mimeograph machine, made its first appearance yesterday. There is no editorial board—the pages get their stuff together and then argue about what's to be printed.

Abraham Lincoln was the subject of the leading editorial of the first issue which said: "Abraham Lincoln—a Man of the Ages. He was but a pioneer's son, but he grew up and became one of the highest officers of the land. He had but five books from which to study yet his wisdom was unsurpassed.

"We have books galore and our brains are as dull as night. And why? Because we have no ambition. We are lazy. Young America, wake up! and follow Lincoln's footsteps. Be Americans."

Young Phillips testified he did not see Miss Burns and Hucks until they were not more than five feet in front of his car. He said he made every effort to stop and avoid hitting them.

The Phillips car came up Georgia avenue. The three passengers besides Phillips were Meredith R. Jones, 19, of 1813 Kalorama road northwest; Mildred Thompson, of 5101 Illinois avenue northwest, and Evelyn Berger, of 520 Quincy street northwest. They were questioned and released by police following the accident.

Nation Early Began Fetes On Washington's Birthday

Celebrations Were Held Before His Death, Including Loyal Demonstration at Valley Forge and Gala Festivities at First Two Capitals.

By L. LOWELL JOHNSON.

One of the six holidays celebrated throughout the Nation is George Washington's Birthday. It is the only holiday, significantly enough, of the half dozen observed nationally, which commemorates the birth of a man—the other five are all anniversaries of events such as the signing of the Declaration of Independence, the World War Armistice and similar important occasions.

The custom of publicly celebrating Washington's Birthday originated before his death, and the practice spread, State by State, until it has become a legal, national holiday.

Prior to the Revolutionary War, Americans celebrated the birthdays of various European monarchs, but after independence had been established it was quite natural that Washington's birth anniversary should supplant these occasions. As the courageous leader of the American armies, Washington had finally decisively defeated the British and made independence a certainty. He had become the most widely esteemed and beloved man in the country, and his natal day was selected as an appropriate time for general thanksgiving and rejoicing.

The custom of celebrating Washington's Birthday was not delayed until after his death, and the Father of His Country often personally received the felicitations of his grateful countrymen on his natal day. The custom, once begun, was taken up with enthusiasm by private and public groups, and many interesting accounts of these early celebrations have been recorded by the newspapers of the day.

Use of Julian Calendar.

At the time of Washington's birth in 1732 the Julian calendar was in use, and he first opened his eyes to the light of day on February 11. In 1752 this calendar was supplanted by the Gregorian, now in use, and February 11 became February 22. Thus it was that for the first 20 years of his life Washington's birthday was celebrated on the 11th day of the month. After the calendar was changed the custom of observing the 11th continued in many places, and even today the Washington Society of Alexandria, Washington's home town in Virginia, holds a private observance of that day but joins in the celebration always held on the 22d.

It would be interesting to know just how Washington observed his own birthday during the early part of his life, but in all his diaries which have been preserved he makes no mention of any sort of celebration. Nor do we have any other record of his early years that would throw any light on the matter. The only birthdays which Washington ever noted as such in his diaries were those publicly celebrated during the last two or three years of his life.

The first known observance of Washington's birth anniversary in which anyone aside from his family participated took place at Valley Forge on February 22, 1778. The Commander in Chief's well-known liking for music doubtless inspired the events of that day, for Washington was serenaded by the band of Col. Proctor's Artillery.

Celebrations by Army.

Washington graciously received this compliment from the soldiers, and his expense book of the time shows that the men were rewarded with a gift of one pound ten shillings in hard money—an article of notable scarcity at that time.

Perhaps the practice of observing Washington's birthday was maintained by the Army during the years following, but the next recorded commemoration took place in 1781 while the general was in winter quarters at New Windsor. Count Rochambeau, in command of the French troops at Newport, declared a holiday in camp and prepared a celebration in hopes that Washington himself could attend. Unfortunately, the commander in chief was prevented from being present on this occasion, so the French held their own observance on February 12, the celebration having been postponed to give Washington a better opportunity to get to Newport. An account of the program of the day, which was sent to Washington, showed that the celebration consisted of a parade of the soldiers, a salute to the American general and a suspension of all labor in camp. This was a distinct tribute to Washington and clearly revealed the admiration and respect in which he was held by his French allies.

The first public observance of Washington's birthday which found its way into the press occurred in 1782 in Richmond, Va., and was noted in the following news item from that city: "Tuesday last being the birthday of his excellency, General Washington, our illustrious commander in chief, the same was commemorated here with the utmost demonstrations of joy." The festivities were held on February 11, and the following year the newspapers of other cities contained accounts of celebrations on the same date. In 1784 the day was publicly observed for the first time by the City of New York just two months after the British troops had evacuated.

The happiest birthdays Washington ever spent were those which found him at Mount Vernon. On different birthdays during this period he "Rid to my mill," or "Rid to Muddy Hole, Doeg Run and the Mill before dinner, and went out with my gun after it." On the last birthday he spent at home before he assumed command of the army he "dined at Mr. Digges."

After peace had been won, Washington returned to Mount Vernon for a few years' enjoyment of private life before he was called to fill the office of Chief Executive. Again the fascination of agricultural pursuits held him, and at least two of his birthdays were spent planting trees, shrubs and flowers, or plowing his fields. Washington's love for plants and the satisfaction he obtained from working with them, perhaps influenced Texas to designate his birthday as Arbor Day.

Commemoration by Tammany.

When Washington was elected to the Presidency in 1789 he went to New York to assume office, for that city had been chosen as the temporary Capital of the United States. His first birthday as President was spent in moving to his new quarters, as his diary for that day records. No intimation whatever is to be found in that journal that it was his birthday. However, the occasion was not allowed to pass unnoticed, for the Tammany Society, then less than a year old, fittingly celebrated the first Washington's Birthday in its history.

The complete account of Tammany's commemoration was contained in the newspapers the next day, and from the best of these accounts the following is taken:

"At a meeting of the Society of St. Tammany, at their wigwam in this city, on Monday evening last, after finishing the ordinary business of the evening, it was unanimously resolved that February 22 be, from this day and ever after, commemorated by this society as the birthday of the illustrious George Washington, President of the United States of America.

"The society then proceeded to the commemoration of the auspicious day which gave birth to the distinguished chief, and toasts were drank in porter, the produce of the United States, accompanied with universal acclamations of applause.

"After mutual reciprocations of friendship on the joyous occasion, the society adjourned with their usual order and harmony."

From the time Washington was inaugurated President, Congress adopted the practice of adjourning for a half-hour to congratulate him on the happy return of his natal day. There was one break in this procedure, however, when, in 1796, great animosities were aroused over the unpopular Jay's treaty with England, which Washington nevertheless approved. On that birthday the customary greetings were not accorded the President.

In no place was Washington's birthday observed more ostentatiously than in Philadelphia during his residence there as President. The pretentious and elaborate celebrations which where held there for six years from 1791 have been detailed in newspaper accounts of that time.

Ball of Honor Given.

On February 24, 1792, Dunlap's American Daily Advertiser contained the following:

"On Tuesday evening the 21st. inst. the city dancing assembly gave a ball in honor of the birth day of the President of the United States. They were honored on this occasion by the company of the President and Mrs. Washington, the Vice President, the foreign ministers, Mr. Speaker and most of the members of the two houses of Congress, the Governor of the State and of the Western Territory, together with many of the most respectable officers of the United States and of this State; and to crown the whole with one of the most brilliant displays of beauty ever exhibited in this city."

In 1793 the same paper contained an account of the celebration held that year. After describing a long parade of the militia, the paper quaintly notes:

"All the shipping in the harbor had their colors hoisted out, and the bells of Christ Church rang peals every half hour during the day. Most of the members of both houses of Congress and many thousands of respectable citizens, waited on the President to pay him a visit of personal respect and offer their sincere congratulations on the occasion. Indeed every possible testimony of joy was expressed throughout the city of Philadelphia, and the beauty of the weather added greatly to the scene by seeming to welcome the day on which our trusty patriot, victorious general and excellent Chief Magistrate, entered his sixty-second year; in the evening there was an elegant ball at Ailler's Hotel; and in many other places the day was closed with conviviality and heartfelt rejoicings."

A new note was added in 1796 when one of the papers observed that cake and wine were served to all who called on the President to pay their respects on his birthday.

Last Birthday as President.

In 1797 Washington's last birthday as President was celebrated in Philadelphia. This one was especially noticed by everybody in the city, according to newspaper accounts, and it was stated that at the ball that evening all were affected by the thought that the beloved President was soon to retire to private life.

When Washington retired from the Presidency in 1797 he gladly returned to Mount Vernon. But his life was nearing its close, and only two more birthdays remained to him in mortality. However, the loyal people of Alexandria observed these occasions with all respect and honor to their illustrious fellow townsman, preferring to hold the commemorations on February 11, following the old style calendar. Washington notes in his diary of February 12, 1799, that maneuvers were held by the "Uniform Corps" on that day, and an "elegant ball and supper" took place at night. But at this ball the retired President and his wife were merely onlookers—the time had passed when they could join in the hilarity of such occasions.

What was really Washington's last birthday, however, was celebrated at Mount Vernon eleven days after the fete at Alexandria by the marriage of Lawrence Lewis, Washington's nephew, and Nellie Custis, Mrs. Washington's granddaughter. Washington records the event briefly: "The Rev. Mr. Davis and Mrs. George Calvert came to dinner and Miss Custis was married about candle light to Mr. Lawrence Lewis." The diary states that it "rained in the morning," and that the mercury was "at 30;" but the dreary weather was outside—inside all was happiness.

"About candle light," wrote Washington in this entry on his last birthday. How significant these words were. For the tired old man the candle light of life had come. But he could look upon the approaching night with no fear. He had served his country and his fellow men in a manner above reproach, and the close of day brought no regrets.

ported the garrison a mere heap of ruins after repeated aerial bombings. He also officially reported receipt of a Japanese demand that Chinese evacuate the sector on threat of an immediate Japanese attack in "full force."

"I am tired of Japanese aggressions," Gov. Tang said. "The Japanese are drunk with aggression. We are determined to hold our positions and ignore the Japanese demands."

Chinese officials said they believed that fighting on a large scale was imminent as a result of the Japanese demands. They said they expected the offensive they are prepared to meet would extend along the entire eastern frontier of Jehol. Thousands of troops are being moved into strategic points.

Tokyo, Feb. 18 (U.P.).—China must give the Province of Jehol up to Japan or suffer the consequences, Sadao Araki, minister of war, said today.

Defying the Western world, Araki said other nations must not interfere while Japan settles her differences with China.

MAYORS' PLEA SPURS SENATE TOWARD AID

Vote Near on Wagner's Bill to Lend $300,000,000 to Cities and States.

(Associated Press.)

The Senate's onrushing momentum of the last week carried it yesterday near a vote on the vast program for giving succor to the unemployed.

Shortly before an agreement was reached to vote on the relief proposal at 4:30 p. m. tomorrow, mayor-spokesmen for 40 large cities pleaded with the Senate Banking Committee for legislative aid to prevent default on municipal debts.

The majority sentiment on the unemployment problem apparently indicated approval for the Wagner bill expanding by $300,000,000 the existing Reconstruction Finance Corporation fund for destitution relief loans to States and cities and removing the self-liquidating restrictions on public improvement projects which may be financed by loans from the corporation's $1,500,000,000 construction fund.

Proposed as Substitute.

This measure of Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, was proposed as a substitute for the La Follette-Costigan bill providing $500,000,000 as an outright grant for unemployment and destitution relief.

Part of the Wagner program—that permitting loans for "needful projects in the public interest" and removing the self-liquidating requirement—was approved Friday, but Senator Costigan (Democrat), Colorado, yesterday obtained reconsideration to offer a minor amendment.

With this opening the Wagner liberalization proposal was subjected to further attack from Senators King, Utah, and Gore, Oklahoma, Democrats.

Warns of Trouble.

King warned the Nation was "embarking upon a sea of trouble" and said the amendment would "open the door for dangerous invasions of the Treasury."

Gore said the Government "had embarked on that policy long ago" and added the belief "we are deliberately destroying the credit of the United States."

"Credit is to a nation what honor is to man and chastity is to a woman," Gore asserted. "We are deliberately destroying it."

"Too Heavy to Bear."

"I am sure no State would apply for a loan except that the burden was too heavy to bear," Wagner interrupted. King disagreed, saying the State of New York "with all its wealth ought to be able to cope with the situation."

On behalf of the large cities of the Nation, Mayors Frank Murphy of Detroit, James M. Curley of Boston and Dan W. Hoan of Milwaukee and Comptroller M. S. Szymczak, of Chicago, appeared before a specially arranged meeting of the Banking Committee to present their resolutions approved Friday at a downtown conference.

The group cited financial difficulties of a number of cities and recommended changes in the reconstruction act to permit loans to cities on municipal refunding bonds, tax anticipation warrants and tax delinquency notes.

Question of Coordination.

Chairman Norbeck told the group he could not give them a "ready answer" on behalf of the committee as only a few members were present.

He did say, however, that the committee wanted to help "if it could without getting deeper and deeper into a situation where we can't see our way out."

"There is sufficient wealth in this Nation," the South Dakota Republican said, "and it is just a question of coordination and putting our great natural resources to work."

After getting reconsideration of the Wagner amendment adopted yesterday, Costigan obtained approval of a change to permit loans by the R. F. C., to private corporations for self-liquidating urban water systems and irrigation projects.

Artillery Carried To Front by Plane

Gen. Brown Is Pleased at Result of Panama War Games.

Panama City, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—An entire battalion of field artillery moved into action in the air today when 10 bombing planes, transporting 3-inch mountain howitzers, escorted 21 pursuit and 29 observation transport planes to repulse a theoretical enemy landing force in the interior of Panama.

The demonstration, which is believed to be the first of its kind in military history, closed the maneuvers of the Panama Canal military department.

Gen. Preston Brown, who was in charge of the war games, said he was pleased with the results of today's demonstration. It revealed, he said, "the feasibility of transporting light artillery by air in order to repel surprise attacks."

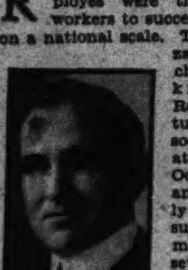
The Federal Diary

By GEORGE D. RILEY

This is one of a series of sketches on Government employe organizations and their leaders.

RAILWAY MAIL SERVICE employes were the first postal workers to successfully organize on a national scale. The first organization of this character was known as the Railway Mail Mutual Benefit Association, formed at Chicago in October, 1874; and it was largely to provide insurance for its members. After several years it became apparent to railway postal clerks that they needed to enlarge the scope of their organization founded in 1874 or to establish an additional organization devoted to improvement of working and service conditions.



William M. Collins.

A meeting at Cincinnati, July 15, 1891, resulted in forming an additional organization of railway postal clerks, known as the National Association of Railway Postal Clerks. Its purpose was declared as being "to promote a closer relationship among the clerks and to better enable them to take steps for the benefit of the service." Benefit to the service was understood to also include better conditions for the employe.

Thereafter the organization held national conventions annually until 1913, since when the national conventions have met biennially. The last convention met at San Antonio, Tex., in November 1931. The next national convention will meet September, 1933, at Seattle, Wash. National conventions are composed of the four national officers, who are president, vice president, secretary-treasurer and industrial secretary; the fifteen division presidents and one delegate for each 300 members or major fraction thereof within each division organization. There is a women's auxiliary, composed of the wives, sisters, &c., of railway postal clerks, who hold their national convention at the same time and place, but independently of the Railway Mail Association.

BORN at Verona, Wis., April 23, 1876, William M. Collins, new president, R. M. A., entered the Railway Mail Service in 1901 and was appointed to the Chicago, Milwaukee & North McGregor, R. P. O.

In 1910 he transferred to the Chicago & Minneapolis R. P. O., where he served until February, 1918, when he resigned from the service to accept the position of industrial secretary of the Railway Mail Association, with headquarters at Washington, to which he had been elected by the executive committee of that organization.

The office of industrial secretary has been established by the national convention of the Railway Mail Association, held at Cleveland Ohio, the previous year. Among the other duties of such an office is the work of compiling data and statistics and to do research work in connection with the railway mail service and its personnel. Mr. Collins was selected to fill the position because of his long experience in organization work and his expert knowledge of the railway mail service.

His first official position in the Railway Mail Association was that of vice president of what is known as the Tenth Division, comprising States of Wisconsin Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and the northern peninsula of Michigan. He was elected to this office in 1910 and held it for three years. In 1913 he was elected president of the Tenth Division, holding that position until the early part of 1918 when he became the national industrial secretary of the organization. He held this position until September, 1921, when he became national president of the association, having been elected in the referendum election held three months previously. He has been elected to the position at referendum elections held each two years since 1921.

UNDER his presidency, membership of the Railway Mail Association has increased from 16,525 in 1921, to 20,500 at present. As the number of employes and officials in the Railway Mail Service is only slightly above 21,000, the present membership of the association represents an unusually high percentage of those eligible to join it. Improvement in wage and working conditions of railway postal clerks since 1921 has been equally marked. The more important improvements secured through legislative action are as follows:

Elimination of Sundays and holidays from sick leave. Law granting full credit for time when trains are delayed. Credit for all substitute service to be given upon regular appointment, with advancement to relative higher grade. Travel allowance increased from $2 to $3 per day. Reclassification act of February 28, 1925, providing salary increases for all railway postal clerks from $300 to $450, with higher classification given to certain groups.

Retirement law amended in 1926 to increase annuities from $720 to $1,000, and again amended in 1930 to increase the annuity to $1,200, and granting optional retirement to railway postal clerks, after 30 years of service, at 60 years of age. Federal compensation act amended increasing maximum benefits for the injured employe from $66.66 per month to $116.66 per month; increasing widow's benefits from $35 per month to $61.25 per month, and benefits for minor children from $10 per month to $17.50 per month.

Night differential law providing additional pay of 10 per cent for work performed between 6 p. m. and 6 a. m. Sick leave law, providing for 10 days' sick leave with pay annually; and permitting unused portion of it to accumulate for future use up to six months.

Postal policy act, under which the cost of the free and welfare service performed by the Postoffice Department for other governmental departments is deducted from the operating costs of the postoffice. Shorter workweek law, limiting hours of duty not to exceed an average of 44 each week, including a definite study allowance period.

IN addition many other improvements have been secured through administrative action, due to cooperation between President Collins and departmental officials. One of the most important equitable and well-established seniority systems in the Railway Mail Service. Other beneficial administrative rulings have been secured relating to elimination of deficiencies at close of each fiscal year; liberalization of expense allowance to substitutes; more liberal line organization and vacation rulings; relief on short turn-around runs, and other matters relating to the technical side of employment in the Railway Mail Service.

In September, 1904, the name of the organization was changed from the National Association of Railway Postal Clerks to Railway Mail Association. The Railway Mail Association is the only postal organization having direct election of officers, which is done by a mail ballot, each member being furnished a ballot and stamped return envelope for casting a secret vote. All national and division officers, as well as delegates to the national convention, are elected in this manner. The association maintains two offices, one at Portsmouth, N. H., handling the beneficiary department, established in 1898, the other, the executive headquarters at Washington, the latter being established in 1917. The Washington office is in charge of the national president, the industrial secretary and the editor of the association's official journal, the Railway Postoffice, 64-page monthly publication. The Portsmouth office is under the secretary-treasurer, who handles the beneficiary department. Following approval by a referendum vote, the Railway Mail Association affiliated with the American Federation of Labor, December 22, 1917.

In structure, the Railway Mail Association is organized along the lines similar to the Railway Mail Service. It has fifteen division organizations, corresponding to the fifteen divisions of the Railway Mail Service, which are subordinate to the national association. Divisions of the Railway Mail Service cover certain specified territory, the first division being the New England States, while Washington is located in what is known as the third division, consisting of the District of Columbia, North Carolina, Maryland, Virginia and West Virginia, except the Peninsula of Maryland and Virginia. Each division organization of the association covers corresponding territory; and in addition local branches are located throughout the country in all large cities and railroad centers. Local branches meet monthly, but the division organizations meet only once biennially.

The executive committee of the national association consists of the four national officers and the fifteen division presidents. In the interim between national conventions this executive committee has full authority to act on legislation or other matters, excepting amending the constitution.

Seated—Marion Clare and Edwin Niggli. Standing—Cary R. Sage, Theodore Henckels and Walter C. Claflin. All in Commerce Translation Unit.

IN this business of trading with the wide world (what trading there is left), with its infinite variety of languages, it goes without saying that an indispensable function is that of translating the many tongues into an understandable and accurate English, for without the aid of interpretation we would be in much the same fix as the first discoverers of cuneiform script trying to unravel the mysteries of the ancient world.

Some years ago there was a popular ditty which had to do with "the Argentines, the Portuguese and the Greeks," dealing with the confusion resulting from the diversity of nationalities and tongues in this country. However, this is nothing, as compared with the complexities of languages dealt with by Commerce's translation unit. Here, if anywhere, the name polyglot fits truly.

The total number of languages which may go into that room and come out of the melting pot full-fledged, perfect English is at least nineteen. We say "at least" because this is the standard number. There are others, too, which are pieced together by the translators. It is to shine a ray of light into a dark corner that this story is written.

In 1927, work having so mounted that it could not be properly taken care of, authorities, at the recommendation of Dr. Theodore Henckels, in charge, appointed Edwin Niggli senior translator; he came with a knowledge of eight modern European tongues, but being of that sturdy German-Swiss stock that emigrated to these shores 300 years ago, and born in Texas, plunged right into the stream of linguistic material that came for translation, and at present, by his indefatigable, selfless, and ambitious goal, has by this time mastered eight more languages, so that the unit was thenceforth able to give most acceptable returns in sixteen different languages.

IN 1928 the "boom" struck sidewise into the translation unit and further help was required to satisfy demands not only from the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, but from all bureaus connected with Commerce, excepting two. The unit was fortunate in securing the services of Walter E. Claflin, who had passed Civil Service examination for translator in four languages. His letter of application marked him in Dr. Henckels' mind as an A-1 man, capable, forthright, sincere and honest to the core, all of which qualities he has maintained 100 per cent since his advent in the bureau; but, due either to the native instinct of improving himself and his usefulness, or perhaps partly inspired by the splendid spirit of our associate, Niggli, Mr. Claflin in the last four years has mastered five additional languages, including Russian.

However, the amount of work requested of the unit was constantly increasing, and to keep abreast with demand a new man had to be secured. C. R. Sage, who for many years had been connected with the surgeon general's office and the Pan-American Union, called upon the chief of the personnel division and requested information on conditions under which he might serve as translator. The personnel chief sent him to Dr. Henckels, who after ten minutes' conversation decided that Mr. Sage was the man for that place, provided he proved competent in his claim to ability to translate ten languages. Mr. Sage was given a written examination from ten different languages and on all papers he was rated anywhere between 82 and 90 per cent. This was not sufficient proof, so that the Civil Service Commission might go ahead and allow the appointment, and the commission decided to give Mr. Sage another noncompetitive examination in the same ten languages, which was effected in two successive days, and as a result of which Mr. Sage's ratings, not failing in a single one, were reported as between 86 and 90 per cent.

COMMISSIONER GEORGE R. WALES, on learning this result, telephoned Dr. Henckels, of that unit, and congratulated him on the success with which Mr. Sage had undergone that necessary new ordeal to satisfy the commission as to his attainments, stating also that Mr. Sage's record was the highest in the files of the C. S. C. Both Mr. Claflin and Mr. Sage are native Americans, the former of fine New England stock, the latter of Maryland stock.

Again a new onslaught was directed against the unit by an overwhelming number of publications from which translations in as many as 22 different languages had to be made. To take care of this work the chief of the unit requested stenographic help in 1929 and Miss Marion Clare, of Swedish stock but native born, joined the unit. Miss Clare proved herself an exemplary stenographer and most intelligent. She had studied French for a couple of years in the high school and evinced an immediate interest in translations dictated to her from the French language; but little encouragement was required to start her on the way to new conquests; she took private French lessons and in her independent reading was always given ready help by her associates in the unit; no sooner had she become fluent in the reading of the French language than she took up the study of Spanish, which she pursued assiduously with the help of her associates, and in 1931, when a civil service examination for translators was held, she qualified in both French and Spanish, the ratings being 86-88, respectively. Since that time Miss Clare has not only qualified for translation of the more simple articles in the Portuguese language, but, in addition, has taken up and perfected herself in the knowledge of the German language, so that she is able also to translate quite readily the simpler articles in these two languages.

A Home Hint.

Here's a home hint from the Department of Agriculture: A lined winter coat generally wears out under the arm and near the neck first. The coat may be patched if there is a pocket, with no cost to the owner.

Cut out the lining of the pocket. Sew up the pocket neatly. Use the material of the pocket and patch the worn spots of the armhole and the neck. This will prolong the life of the old coat.

Finding a pronouncer is the chief task of the arrangements committee preparing for the Federal Diary Spelling Bee at the National. But George I. Kelley, chairman, says he has just about closed negotiations.

You see, a pronouncer has his cares during such a contest, for he must serve the words out so they can be recognized by those equipped to spell them.

The latest entrants into the spelling contest are R. W. Murtberg, Navy, and S. J. ("Bossy") Gillis, Statistics, I. C. C.

WHILE the Oglethorpe stamp was first placed on sale at Savannah, Ga., February 12, the Postoffice Department has not as yet received any statement from that postoffice as to the total sales of stamps the first day. Neither have any returns been received from the postmaster at Atlanta, where the commemorative stamp went on sale Monday.

"Sales the first day of the Gen. Oglethorpe stamp at the Philatelic Agency," declared Michael L. Eidsness, jr., superintendent, division of stamps, "far exceeded our expectations, and were greater in money value than the first day sales of the Olympia, the William Penn or the Daniel Webster stamps at the agency. Being of the 3-cent denomination, we could not hope to equal the first day sales of some of the 2-cent commemorative stamps. Nevertheless, the total of nearly $5,000 received demonstrates beyond doubt that stamp collectors throughout the country have not lost their interest in first-day issues."

SHORTAGE OF SUGAR SEEN IN WAR TIMES

Tariff Body Advised Higher Duty Would Cripple Cuban Industry.

(Associated Press.)

A claim that the United States might suffer a serious sugar shortage in the event of a war which isolated the Philippines, Hawaii and Puerto Rico was made yesterday to the Tariff Commission in an argument raising the duty on the Cuban product.

It came from George T. Walker, president of the Matanzas Sugar Co., of Cuba, who was the final witness at a five-day hearing to determine whether the present 2-cent a pound duty against that country should be increased to benefit domestic producers.

Arguments will be made tomorrow, after which the commission will take under advisement the application by domestic producers. Under the flexible provision of the tariff act, the rates can be raised or lowered by 50 per cent of the existing duty.

Before Mr. Walker testified, a group of United States producers argued that the Cuban product is seriously interfering with their business, and that if protection is not obtained they will have to curtail operations or move their refineries to Cuba.

Mr. Walker said the tariff increase would injure greatly the Cuban industry, and if this country became engaged in war it might have unpleasant repercussions.

At present, he explained, both Cuba and the United States combined are not producing enough sugar for domestic needs. He added that if the supply of the other countries were cut off the American housewife might not be able to keep her sugar bowl full.

J. H. Lieneau, of New York, president of the National Sugar Refining Co., told the commission:

"Every pound of refined sugar that comes in from Cuba replaces a pound of refined sugar produced in this country. And the imports are increasing."

Another official of the same company—Ellsworth Bunker, vice president—said its earnings last month were $150,000 "in the red" after they had "consistently declined" of late.

A number of witnesses testified that because of low costs of production in Cuba that country could lay down its product in this country at such a figure that it was cheaper than that domestically produced.

The Mount Vernon Ladies Association issued the following statement yesterday in conjunction with their announcement that Mount Vernon will be open Sunday, March 5, as a tribute to the new President of the United States:

"The Mount Vernon Ladies Association hopes that those who come there will feel the sacredness of the spot and will enter it with the same reverence they would show to churches.

"To these visitors Miss Cunningham, the founder of the association to which the Nation owes the preservation of Mount Vernon, might say in words as fresh and apt today as when she first spoke them, in 1874, on bidding farewell to her colleagues:

"'Ladies, the home of Washington is in your charge. See to it that you keep it the "Home of Washington!"

"'Let no irreverent hand change it; no vandal hands desecrate it with the fingers of progress!

"'Those who go to the home in which he lived and died wish to see in what he lived and died.'

"'Let one spot in this grand country of ours be saved from change. Upon you rests this duty.'"

HANS KINDLER GAINS STUDENTS' PLAUDITS

National Symphony Pleases Children at Central High School.

Hundreds of students from Washington public and private schools greeted Hans Kindler, director of the National Symphony Orchestra, with a prolonged ovation yesterday when he appeared on the stage of the Central High School Auditorium to conduct the young people's concert of his organization.

Mr. Kindler explained to his audience the purpose and place of the symphony in the scheme of things musical and he described the various movements in such a composition. The program was opened with the "First Movement of the Fifth Symphony," by Schubert.

It was followed by the excellent playing of the "Valse Triste," by Sibelius and Grieg's "In the Cave of the Mountain King," and also received much applause.

The audience joined merrily in the singing of "Charlie Is My Darling" and "Santa Lucia," the boys vieing with the girls in the singing of these familiar songs.

The program was completed with the playing of "Spanish Caprice," by Rimsky Korsakov.

The next program will be that of the final children's concert to be held at the Central High School Auditorium on March 11 at 11 a. m.

LEAVE ROADS ALONE, LOREE ASKS SENATE

Want Carriers to Be Permitted to Work Out Their Own Salvation.

(Associated Press.)

A plea that the railroads be allowed to work out their own salvation, unhampered by regulating restrictions, was put before the Senate Finance Committee yesterday by one of the industry's dominating figures, L. F. Loree, president of the Delaware & Hudson.

Loree, appearing in the committee's study of depression remedies, said that "if the railroads were turned loose, they would very soon straighten themselves up." He asked that "individual management" be permitted.

Answering Senator Watson, of Indiana, the Republican leader, the railway executive explained he meant that now the roads are restricted in almost everything they try to do by State or Federal regulatory provisions.

A broad legal reform program for overcoming troubles besetting the railroads was laid down by Loree. It included repeal of the recapture of valuation provisions of Interstate Commerce laws and of the section providing for giving the lowest possible preferential rates to agriculture.

A "vast increase" in railroad wages, heavy taxation and accounting he regarded as the basic cause of railroad ailments, along with "excessively restrictive control imposed by national and State governments."

Crawford Again Balks Extradition

Ilsley Suspect Files Writ of Habeas Corpus, Foiling Virginia Anew.

Boston, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—A writ of habeas corpus was filed in Federal court today on behalf of George Crawford, 28-year-old Negro, whose extradition to Virginia to face charges of murdering two white women was ordered yesterday by Gov. Joseph B. Ely.

The action of Crawford's lawyers, Butler R. Wilson, Negro attorney, and J. Weston Allen, former attorney general of the State, automatically stays extradition. The writ was made returnable on Monday, February 27.

Chief among reasons cited in the application for the writ was the contention that Crawford was not the man named in the Virginia warrant.

SENATE PASSES BILL FOR CUTS IN COTTON

Mortgage Plan Is Offered in House; Hyde Proposes to Cut Total Acreage.

By LAWRENCE SULLIVAN.

Emergency measures of farm relief once more swept to the center of the legislative stage on Capitol Hill yesterday.

While the Senate was passing the Smith bill to sell the Government's cotton holdings to farmers who reduce their 1933 plantings, Representative Marvin Jones, of Texas, chairman of the House Agricultural Committee, introduced a far-reaching proposal for dealing with defaulted farm mortgages. At the same time Secretary of Agriculture Arthur M. Hyde outlined a drastic new proposal for withdrawing not less than 50,000,000 acres of farm land from cultivation next year, with the aid of the Federal Treasury.

The Hyde plan would call for an outlay of approximately $150,000,000 with which to compensate farmers who withdrew marginal land from cultivation. The abandoned acreage would be leased to the Federal Government, thus relieving the debt-burdened farmer of taxes and other charges.

Free Option on Holdings.

The Smith cotton bill, as sent to the House from the Senate, would give every cotton planter in the South the right to take a free option on a portion of the Government's cotton holdings, now estimated at approximately 3,500,000 bales. Each farmer's option would be limited to the amount of cotton he would normally produce, or to the amount by which he decreased his 1933 production under 1932.

The theory of the bill is that the ten-bale cotton farmer may abandon production altogether for a year and still make a little something to live on. The ten-bale option would give him his usual volume of cotton to sell next summer—and the price would be considerably higher than in the last two years.

Senator Smith, the originator and principal Senate sponsor of the bill, bases his plan on the belief that it will reduce the 1933 production by 5,000,000 bales. This would send cotton prices up to 12 or 15 cents a pound next summer.

All the profits on the Government holdings, under the option plan, would go to the individual farmers who reduce their acreage. It is a many-sided and hitherto untried plan, but it has been received enthusiastically by the representatives of the cotton States in Congress.

Senator Copeland, one of the few Democrats who voted against the bill yesterday, said it was bad class legislation, but an overwhelming majority on the Democratic side of the chamber said it was in line with the pledge of President-elect Roosevelt to offer relief measures applicable to the 1933 crop.

Consideration Soon.

Chairman Jones said the House committee would go to work on the Smith bill early this week, with the hope of sending it to the White House within ten days.

At present market prices, the cost to the Government would be in the neighborhood of $150,000,000, the largest cotton bounty ever offered in American legislation.

The new program for mortgage relief, as embodied in the Jones bill, introduced yesterday, would authorize a bureau of mortgages, loans and discounts in the Department of Agriculture.

Persons with nonpaying and defaulted farm mortgages would be authorized to bring their worthless documents to the department and secure in exchange United States Government bonds, bearing interest at the rate of 2¼ per cent. The Jones bill does not place any limit on how much of their sort of Government paper may be floated. It does, however, limit the Government bonds on any one farm to 80 per cent of its true market value.

Representative Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, the Democratic leader, described the new farm mortgage bill yesterday as "a major proposition," and predicted that if it should fail of passage in the short session it surely would be enacted speedily as a part of the Roosevelt program in the special session.

"Many mortgage holders would be glad to get out from under with good Government Bonds in exchange for their mortgages," Representative Rainey said in outlining the bill.

Most Sweeping Yet.

At another point Mr. Rainey described the measure as "the most sweeping piece of legislation ever adopted."

"You mean the most sweeping ever proposed?" he was asked.

"Well, yes; make it that," Mr. Rainey corrected.

Chairman Jones said his measure also would receive prompt consideration in the House Agricultural Committee this week.

Secretary Hyde's new plan for rescuing agriculture is based on the fundamental precept that there is too much acreage in cultivation in the United States. As officially outlined in response to requests from farm leaders and other interested citizens, the plan would, in effect, have the Federal Government compensate the farmers for the marginal acreage abandoned.

"The Secretary of Agriculture or the Federal Farm Board should be given authority to lease during the next crop year about 50,000,000 acres of land out of 355,000,000 of total cultivated area now devoted to the production of cotton, wheat, corn and other cereals, and keep them out of production for one year," Secretary Hyde explained.

"The method of bringing this about would be to notify farmers that the Secretary of Agriculture or the Farm Board would receive bids from individual farmers as to the amount per acre they would accept as rent for their tilled land and allow it to lie fallow. The farmer leasing the land (to the Government) would agree that he would not plant any of the specified crops on any other portion of his farm, but he would not be disturbed in the occupancy of his farm and buildings, and he would have the right to plant a garden for his own domestic use."

Poorest Lands' Bids.

Mr. Hyde explained that the lowest bids for leasing would automatically take the poorest land out of cultivation.

"The low cost producer on fertile land would not be disturbed. This is as it should be."

To gather the renting charges, the Hyde plan would impose a processing tax on the principal farm products, limited perhaps to 1 or 2 per cent, instead of the high equalization taxes proposed in the domestic allotment plan.

The recent flood of farm relief proposals on Capitol Hill has all but deluged the original domestic allotment plan.

Now in Conference.

That tremendous measure, conceived in the House and sharply stripped in the Senate, now is in conference. But the legislative farm-relievers in both House and Senate are so busy with new and better plans that the original comprehensive scheme has been all but forgotten. It also has been vehemently disavowed by the principal farm organizations, who were called together by Democratic leaders in the House early in the session to write their own ticket.

With the aid of Henry Morgenthau, one of Mr. Roosevelt's closest advisers on agricultural matters, they worked out the domestic allotment plan.

Now a dozen bigger and better plans are on the way, in both House and Senate—with every indication pointing to the fact that none will be finally enacted before March 4.

It is almost certain that should any of the more bold ventures in farm relief get out of the congressional cage this session they will be hanged as high as the historical Hyman on presidential vetoes. the President-elect and at present

Depression Reduces List Of Diplomatic Candidates

Few Ambassadorial Aspirants Now Able to Bear Expensive Social Obligations Abroad; Roosevelt Favors Linguists for Key Positions.

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN.

Diplomatic appointments under the Democratic administration will not be as sought after as they were four years ago due to the widespread effects of the depression which have wiped out many fortunes and sent many men, who thought they were destined for diplomacy, back to work. Occupants of the key posts of the new President in London, Paris, Berlin, Tokyo and Rome are still a matter of conjecture. President-elect Roosevelt is finding many of his choices for these important posts are under the necessity of declining for financial reasons. To succeed Mr. Mellon at the American Embassy in London a considerable private fortune is necessary.

The two names that have been put forward most often in this connection are Senator Joseph T. Robinson, Democratic leader in the Senate from Arkansas and formerly member of the American delegation to the London disarmament conference, and John W. Davis, former ambassador there. Norman H. Davis will either be invited to take the London post, if he can afford it, or Paris.

However, the embassy in Paris has several candidates, besides Mr. Davis. Former American Ambassador to Germany James W. Gerard wants to get back into service again by going to Paris, although there is an unwritten law in diplomatic usage against sending the same man to two countries politically in conflict. Robert W. Bingham, publisher of the Louisville Courier-Journal, has been mentioned also for Paris.

Ambassador to Germany.

The American Embassy in Berlin, now occupied by Senator Sackett, has three candidates: Will Wood chairman of the board of the American Car & Foundry Co., who was holding the microphone for President-elect Roosevelt the night he was attacked in Miami; Robert J. Dunham, Chicago banker, and Herbert Bayard Swope, dynamic journalist and former executive editor of the old New York World.

For the Paris and Berlin posts, President-elect Roosevelt has made known through his intimates that he prefers men who are familiar with the language of the country. As he speaks good French and German himself he will be in a position to know. Mr. Swope was once a student for a short time at Heidelberg and both Mr. Wood and Mr. Dunham are familiar with commercial German.

It has been the practice of Roosevelt circles to quietly allow the name of a projected candidate to slip out into print in order to gauge the reaction. This has the double advantage of soothing a disappointment and creating a certain aura of importance around several otherwise undistinguished figures.

The post of Ambassador to Italy will fall to a Washingtonian, Col. Arthur O'Brien, although it is understood that Mrs. O'Brien, the former Mrs. Roebling, would prefer to be in Belgium where her daughter is married to the Belgian Baron von der Elst. However, as Hugh Gibson, a career diplomat participates so prominently in the disarmament discussions at Geneva that it is felt he is one of the few indispensable career men who will be retained. Mr. Gibson is at the present time Ambassador to Belgium. His wife is the former Ynes Reyntiens, whose family is prominently connected with court and diplomatic life in Belgium.

Delicate Far East Situation.

The delicate position of diplomatic affairs in the Far East will assure the continuance of Joseph C. Grew as Ambassador to Tokyo. He is extremely capable, and in addition is able to sustain the financial charges and expenses of this embassy which are known to be very heavy.

The other ambassadorial posts in Europe will be changed. Lammot Belin at present unconfirmed Ambassador to Warsaw will be kept in Poland because he is frequently regarded as a career diplomat and also because his wife's family, the Du Ponts of Wilmington, have been lavish in their campaign gifts to both parties.

Irwin Laughlin, present Ambassador to Spain will be changed but his successor has not been mentioned. Jesse Isidor Straus, the New York merchant, can have the refusal of the American Ambassadorship to Turkey. The same offer has been kept open for Charles Michelson as Minister to Portugal. He is at present in charge of the publicity of the Democratic national committee.

Frederick A. Sterling, although he prefers to remain in Ireland where he has been minister now for the last six years, may accept the post as Ambassador to Spain or Turkey, as his mother-in-law, Mrs. John R. Williams, will become an important figure in the new administration. Mrs. Borden Harriman, aunt of Mrs. Franklin Mott Gunther, is known to be anxious that her nephew, former Minister to Egypt, be given a more important post under the new administration. He, however, has been spoken of in connection with Persia, as has William T. Ellis, of Pennsylvania, who has lived many years in the Near East and is regarded as an authority.

Ira Nelson Morris, former Minister to Sweden, is anxious to return to the diplomatic service and so is Richard Washburn Child, former Ambassador to Italy. With Mr. Child the financial burdens of any social embassy would probably constitute a great problem, although Mr. Morris is under no such handicap.

Warren Delano Robbins, cousin of chief of the protocol at the White House and in the Department of State, is also in line for a European berth. He has had wide experience abroad and in Latin America and could reasonably be assumed to have his choice of the career vacancies in Europe. On the other hand, the President-elect may prefer to keep him in his present post in charge of the ceremonial details at the White House.

The Latin-American diplomatic appointments will constitute the most problematic and the most important phase of the foreign service. The Roosevelt policy, with regard to Latin America, will have to be able to draw on the best men in the department in view of the imminent dangers that are abounding in Leticia and in the Chaco. In addition to these other considerations, however, the next Pan-American conference will be held in Montevideo this December, and preparations will have to be made for it by the men that are now sent to South and Central America as diplomatic representatives of President-elect Roosevelt.

Francis White, the present assistant secretary, in charge of Latin-American relations, has rallied some powerful support for his appointment as American Ambassador to Cuba. Here is a post where, undoubtedly, Will Wood, the American banker and industrialist, will have some definite ideas.

Haiti and Liberia.

Mr. Wood is a great friend of the present Cuban Ambassador here, Oscar Blanco Cintas. Mr. White may be appointed to Buenos Aires or Santiago, if he is not given the Havana post. Will Rogers has been spoken of, whether in jest or seriously is not known, as American Ambassador to Mexico and also the name of Russell Leffingwell, Morgan partner and one-time special assistant at the Treasury Department, has also been heard.

On account of the large percentage of Negro votes, which the President-elect received this time, it is believed that the Negro demand for the appointment of one of their race as Minister to Haiti may be heard. Norman Armour, a career diplomat, is doing a most excellent job in Port au Prince, according to all reports, but the Negro politicians have put forward the name of Walker White, of New York, and Roger Baldwin, of the Civil Liberties Union. For Liberia the same Negro leaders are anxious to have Lester Walton, of the Negro newspaper the New York Age, as American Minister there.

DENVER GANG CHIEF MURDERED IN HOME

Roma, Slain While Playing Mandolin, Had Conferred in Boettcher Kidnaping.

Denver, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Joe Roma, known as the king of Denver gangland, was found shot to death in his home here today, supplying another mystery for authorities seeking to solve the kidnaping of Charles Boettcher 2d. Many pistol bullets pierced Roma's body. Officers said he apparently had been surprised while playing a mandolin.

Roma was reported to have conferred with police concerning the abduction of Boettcher, wealthy young broker, who is held for $60,000 ransom, but there was no specific indication late today of a connection between the kidnaping and the slaying.

Roma was questioned a year ago in the kidnaping of Benjamin P. Bower, bakery manager, who was freed after several days in captivity, but was never connected with the case.

One development in the Boettcher kidnaping was an order by postal authorities for a special system of handling mail addressed to his family and the Rev. B. D. Dagwell, dean of a fashionable Denver church, who has participated in strategic conferences in the case.

Postal authorities instructed mail collectors to scrutinize mail found in street boxes and send those addressed to Dean Dagwell and the Boettcher family to them by special messenger.

Detectives investigating the shooting of Roma said they believed he knew his slayer or slayers and had arisen from his chair in welcome.

Roma was found slumped in the chair by his wife, Mrs. Nettie Roma, when she returned from a visit with her mother. She told authorities her husband apparently was still alive, but he toppled to the floor when she attempted to assist him to rise.

His mandolin was found near the chair. Sheet music was piled neatly on a window sill.

Deputy Coroner George Bostwick, who took charge of Roma's body, said a preliminary examination revealed so many bullet wounds in the man's body it was impossible to determine how many times he had been shot.

2 Dead in Family Quarrels' Climax

Son-in-Law Slays Man, 77, and Commits Suicide, Police Say.

Seattle, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—J. H. Anderson, 77, and his son-in-law, Marquis Lafe Hunt, 48, were shot to death today in what detectives said was a murder and suicide climaxing a series of family quarrels. Detectives named Hunt as the slayer.

Two boys found the bodies while playing in an isolated spot a mile south of the city limits.

In Hunt's pocket was a note to his wife and daughter reading: "Dear Peg and Marge, a change must be made. I am making it. No flowers, no funeral, no burial—cremation please. Goodbye. Lafe."

Mexican Cotton Men To Increase Acreage

Mexicali, Mexico, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Hailed as a solution of the farm economic problem below the border, contracts were signed today between the northern district of Lower California and American owners of Mexican cotton land, which assure the planting of 40,000 acres of cotton this year.

The acreage is twice that farmed last year, when 10,000 bales were harvested.

NEW RATES FOR ELECTRICITY ARE ANNOUNCED BY P. U. C.

charge for 19 kilowatt hours is about 95 cents."

Answering the plea of People's Counsel Richmond B. Keech for a single flat charge or a two-bracket rate for Schedule A, the commission stated:

"The block rate for domestic consumption is now practically universally used. For example, in a nearby community with a municipal plant in the domestic schedule there are six blocks. In Columbus, Ohio, another municipally owned plant, four blocks are used. Here for the next year there will be four blocks. Such a schedule is essentially fair to the users, enables those who desire to use current for other than lighting purposes more readily to do so without incurring the expense for the installation of an additional meter and the necessary wiring charges.

Commercial Users Save.

"When electric power was used in residences mainly for lighting, it was possible to have a flat rate, inasmuch as all domestic customers were then comparatively small users. Now that power is used for many other purposes, including radios, toasters, ranges, refrigerators, etc., it is plainly only fair that the rates for these greater amounts of power should be less. The use of only two blocks would merely accentuate the difference in rates at the breaking point."

The largest reduction is made for commercial users under Schedules D, E and L, effecting total savings of $287,881.

Schedule D, covering general commercial use, will save 16,282 customers $206,562 under the following schedule: 3.8 cents per kilowatt hour for the first 100 hours, 3.6 cents for the next 150, 3.1 cents for the next 3,200, and 2 cents for all in excess of 3,450.

Schedule E, affecting 117 large industrial users, saves $45,034 under the following schedule: 1.8 cents for the first 13,750 hours, 1.2 cents for the next 25,000, 0.7 cents for the next 150,000, and 0.6 cents for all in excess of 188,750 hours. In addition, the monhtly maxium demand charge is put on a monthly, rather than a yearly, basis.

Owners of Apartments.

Schedule L, affecting 41 large industrial users, saves $36,285, under this schedule: 1.4 cents for the first 13,750 kilowatt hours, 1 cent for the next 25,000, 0.6 cent for the next 150,000, and 0.5 cent for all in excess of 188,750 hours. The demand charge is the same as that in schedule L.

D. C. APPROPRIATIONS BILL IS PASSED BY HOUSE VOTE

auditor, said last night that elimination of the $46,000 for workhouse industries will paralyze rehabilitation activities at Lorton, unless the money is put back in the bill by the Senate.

Dependent on this fund is a convict operated brick plant, clothes factory, canning factory, broom plant, printing plant, automobile license plant that also manufactures traffic signs for the District, and a laundry that does work for every Government department, Maj. Donovan said. He said they all will have to close down if the money is not appropriated.

All efforts to increase appropriations to budget strength, except the relief item, went down to crushing defeat.

Representative Clarence J. McLeod (Republican), Michigan, failed in two efforts to have $40,000 written into the bill to provide food for undernourished school children. An identical authorization, sponsored by McLeod, is now pending before Mrs. Norton's District Committee. McLeod said he intends to press it.

Representative Kent E. Keller (Democrat), Illinois, made unsuccessful attempts to increase appropriations for the Tuberculosis Hosptial and Sanitarium. An amendment to increase their allotment by $20,000 was lost when Chairman Cannon refused unanimous consent to go back to the tuberculosis item, which was passed over in reading the bill.

Other amendments lost would have boosted appropriations for the District Militia from $17,417 to $24,750, increased the workhouse appropriation from $290,540 to $326,090, and permitted children of Government employes and Army and Navy officers to attend District schools free of charge.

Stricken From Bill.

A new provision in the bill, denying any funds for pay increases or promotions of District employes, was stricken from the measure on a point of order. Immediately, Representative Cannon introduced another amendment making precisely the same provision in different language. The chair ruled it in order.

The bill as passed provides for a Federal "lump sum" contribution of $6,500,000, against $7,775,000 currently appropriated. A last minute attempt was made by Representative Andrew J. May (Democrat), Kentucky, to reduce this allotment to $400,000, but he was ruled out of order.

A motion to send the bill back to committee to eliminate a provision denying public school instruction to children under 5 years of age, was made by Representative Tilman B. Parks (Democrat), Arkansas. It was defeated and the bill was passed, 209 to 6.

Child Is Brought In.

During the debate on the relief item, Representative John J. Cochran (Democrat), Missouri, walked into the chamber with the infant son of Representative David Hopkins (Republican), Missouri, and placed him in the lap of Representative John J. Boylan (Democrat), New York, in the Speaker's chair. Representative La Guardia, who was speaking, made effective use of the scene. He pleaded with the House not to deny other children of the District advantages enjoyed by the Hopkins child.

Supporting Representative La Guardia in his plea for District relief were Appropriation Chairman Joseph W. Byrns, Representative Connery (Democrat), Massachusetts; Representative Patterson (Democrat), Alabama; Representative Simmons (Republican), Nebraska; Mr. Keller and Mrs. Norton. Representative Blanton (Democrat), Texas, led the fight against it.

Representative William P. Holaday (Republican), Illinois, charged that only once before in the history of Congress had a subcommittee railroaded an appropriation bill as it did this year with the District supply bill.

He said it was reported out without any meeting of the subcommittee. Chairman Cannon denied his charges. The Holaday disclosure followed a bitter attack on the Illinois representative by Representative Blanton. Holaday has repeatedly challenged the accuracy of Blanton's statements concerning the District.

Board's Letter Read.

A letter from the Board of Trade, opposing the intangibles tax increase originally included in the District bill, and asking a further scaling down of taxes, was introduced in the Senate record yesterday by Senator Millard Tydings (Democrat), Maryland. It was referred to Senator Bingham's subcommittee.

The District bill as passed contains no tax increase, and removes the restriction on a scaling down of taxes by the Commissioners. It provides for a 10 per cent discount on all water bills paid within 15 days.

SAVINGS ARE LOST IN DISAGREEMENT

day's session was concluded. They agreed to restore the full $19,000,000 appropriation for air mail, eliminated by the Senate. They also agreed to put back the $2,400,000 Customs Bureau and the $1,000,000 Internal Revenue Bureau appropriations, stricken on motion of Senator King (Democrat), Utah.

On the Bratton amendment, however, directing the heads of all departments to make 5 per cent reductions in appropriations, they refused to give in, although House conferees argued adamantly against it.

Representative Byrns opposed the amendment on three points. First, because it would endanger national defense at a time of tension; second, because it would cause thousands of dismissals, and third, because the President, under the present law, has the authority to reduce appropriations unprotected by statute. He contended the President could use this authority in wisely administering the Byrnes reorganization amendment.

Economy Provisions.

The following economy provisions, on which conferees were unable to agree, will be left out of the substitute economy bill, offered to the House by Representative Byrns:

1. The Bratton 5 per cent departmental cut (savings estimated $143,000,000).
2. The McKellar amendment, calling for Board of Tax Appeal review of all tax refunds over $20,000.
3. The Senate's proposal to abolish the Bureau of Efficiency (savings estimated $150,000).
4. The Senate's proposal to cut the pay of enlisted men 8 1-3 per cent (savings estimated $7,000,000).
5. The ban on automatic promotions and pay increases (estimated cost $4,000,000).

Will Be Eliminated.

There was disagreement on numerous other items of lesser import. In each case the items will be eliminated from the substitute amendment offered in the House.

Leaders were unprepared to say yesterday whether the Garner plan to give the incoming President power to reduce appropriations protected by statute, such as Federal and veterans' compensation, will be offered from the floor when Representative Byrns yields for other amendments.

Representative George Huddleston (Democrat), Alabama, author of a resolution suggested by Speaker Garner as the vehicle for such powers, said last night he will not propose it unless the move is in harmony with plans of House Democratic leaders.

REPEAL BY CONVENTIONS.

If the House of Representatives should adopt the Senate's resolution proposing repeal of the eighteenth amendment, this country will embark upon an experiment never tried before. Repeal under this resolution can not become effective until it has been ratified by conventions in three-fourths of the States. Heretofore amendments have always been ratified or rejected by the State Legislatures. But the wets are not willing to trust repeal in the hands of the legislatures. The plan of submitting repeal to specially chosen conventions has been selected as a sure-fire method of abolishing prohibition.

It appears, however, that some difficulty may be experienced in getting the conventions into operation. The Constitution does not say how these conventions should be organized. It merely states that amendments shall become valid "when ratified by the Legislatures of three-fourths of the several States, or by Conventions in three-fourths thereof, as the one or the other Mode of Ratification may be proposed by the Congress." It is evident from this language that the function of Congress is merely to "propose" amendments, and that regardless of which method is chosen for ratification, action by the States themselves, functioning as such, is essential for ratification.

This point will have a vital effect on the fate of the repeal amendment. It is contended by one group, headed by A. Mitchell Palmer, former Attorney General, that the States have no power to call conventions for the ratification of constitutional amendments, and that such conventions should be assembled under rules laid down by Congress. If this interpretation should prevail, the power of the States over alteration of the Federal Constitution would be weakened, if not broken. The sovereignty of the States would be impaired. It is inconceivable that the founders of the Constitution had any such thought in mind.

A number of constitutional lawyers, including Representative Beck, who is a militant wet, hold that Congress has no authority to call State conventions. Only the State legislatures may set in motion the machinery of ratifying conventions. Leaders in the House seem disposed to cling to this view.

It seems inevitable that State legislatures must pass on the question of repeal, before State conventions are called. Of course, the legislatures will be asked merely to provide for conventions. But if the drys are disposed to fight ratification, they can probably do it more effectively by opposing the organization of conventions than they could by opposing repeal in the convention itself. Instead of being only one step away from ratification when it leaves Capitol Hill, the repeal measure will have two hurdles to clear.

In some States the drys may not put up an effective fight against the calling of a convention. But it can not be supposed that the drys will forego any opportunity to defeat the repeal movement. Wet States will doubtless hold conventions without delay after the repeal resolution is passed by Congress. But some of the dry and doubtful States, however, may never pass judgment on the proposed amendment. Obstructive tactics and attempts to give undue representation to wet or dry groups in the conventions may be expected. If Congress should attempt to interfere there would be an outcry against usurpation of States' rights.

The repeal movement has been complicated by the attempt to take it out of the State legislatures. When the time comes to look backward over the course of the repeal amendment, it is not improbable that the wets will consider the resort to conventions as a serious blunder.

FOR MUNICIPAL PROGRESS.

By the cooperation of Washington business organizations and banks a movement looking to betterment of local conditions has been worked out which possesses distinct novelty and promise of success. The plan in some phases has been adopted in Philadelphia and elsewhere, with good results. Property owners are invited to repair, renew and improve their buildings under the incentive of reduced prices and moderate wages, in order to increase employment at this time and get money into circulation. The banks, under careful safeguards which are fair to all concerned, have agreed to grant loans up to $500 to property owners for the purpose of improving their holdings. Repayment of these loans in small monthly installments will make it easy for property owners to finance their improvements.

The concerted efforts of citizens in a city-wide campaign of betterment and "renovizing" of buildings would not only contribute greatly to the appearance of Washington and aid materially in relief of the unemployed, but would increase the value of property so improved and thus prove a profitable investment. It is a practical plan of cooperation for public and individual welfare which deserves the support of every citizen.

MOUNT VERNON.

The decision of the Mount Vernon Ladies Association to open Mount Vernon to the public on Sunday, March 5, will meet with cordial public approval. The order is given for the purpose of accommodating inauguration visitors, many of whom may not have another opportunity to visit Washington, and whose stay must be very brief.

The association requests that Sunday visitors enter the home of Washington in a reverent spirit, in keeping with the sentiment with which the world honors the memory of Washington. Because of the extraordinary number of visitors who may take advantage of the opportunity to view the home and tomb at Mount Vernon there will be danger of vandalism and misbehavior unless each visitor makes it his duty to pay homage to Washington by seemly conduct.

NO DOLE FOR STATES.

Once more the Senate is confronted with the direct question whether relief shall be administered in the form of a dole from the Federal Treasury. The La Follette-Costigan bill, which is under consideration, would grant to the States without obligation $200,000,000 to be distributed without regard to need or local resources of relief. In addition this bill would provide $300,000,000 to be disbursed on the showing of actual need.

If this measure should be adopted it would completely upset the principle on which the Government has heretofore sought to relieve distress. Last year Congress appropriated $300,000,000 for loans to States that might be unable to finance their own needs. The Reconstruction Finance Corporation has made loans to some States which have not exhausted their own borrowing power, yet it still has a considerable part of the fund available for States in actual need. There are many indications that this grant of money from Washington has weakened the self-reliance of States and caused them to look to Uncle Sam instead of to their own taxpayers for money to meet their obligations. Even the wealthy State of New York came begging to Washington without attempting to meet its deficiencies by the issue of State bonds.

It would be well for Congress to allow the R. F. C. funds sufficient to meet any emergency call from States that may be at the end of their resources. Beyond that, however, Congress can not safely go. The proposal to give to the States $500,000,000 when the national budget is far out of balance is inexcusable. It threatens the morale and self-dependence of the States. It would add to the difficulties of balancing the budget and the restoration of confidence. Normal processes of recovery would be paralyzed. All plans for economy would count for nothing if the Senate should grant a $500,000,000 dole to the States.

On another front sound relief legislation is jeopardized. Senator Wagner's proposal to strike out the clause under which construction loans by the R. F. C. are made only to self-liquidating projects was adopted by the Senate. Abandonment of this precaution would plunge the Government into another orgy of extravagant building that would heap a tremendous burden upon taxpayers, without relieving unemployment to any appreciable extent. The Government has already discovered that the depression can not be cured by spending money on public works. Retrenchment and not the creation of larger deficits should be the order of the day. If something can be done to stimulate the flow of funds into self-liquidating projects, it would doubtless have beneficial results. But spending for governmental luxuries can not be justified under any pretense.

Virtually all of the States are able to take care of their own needs. There is no panic in the country. States can raise funds, and if they are required to finance their own programs extravagance will be held to a minimum. Furthermore, local deficits and bond issues, if they are necessary, will not have the devastating effect upon confidence that accompanies every increase in the national deficit. If Congress pours out a half billion dollars in the form of a dole to the States, it will do so at the expense of economic recovery.

TREND OF POPULATION.

The growth and shifting of population are subjects of never-ending interest. Sociologists no longer worry over the prospects of population outgrowing the food supply. Today they are more concerned with maintenance of the population at a figure that will prevent a national decline a few years hence. But their fears may be just as unwarranted as were the fears of excessive population a few decades ago.

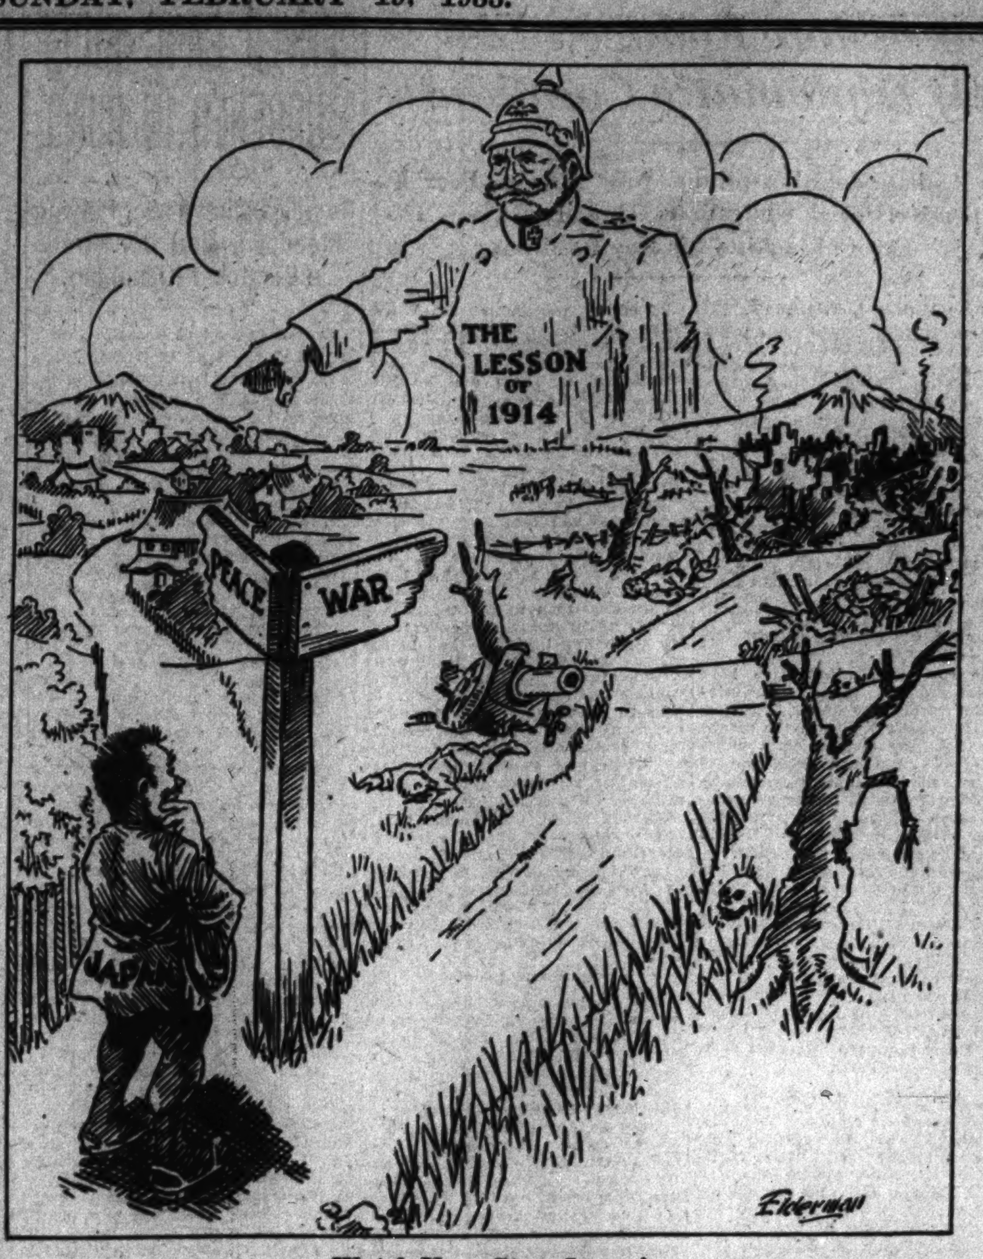
Less than ten years ago Profs. Pearl and Reed, of Johns Hopkins University, estimated from trends then current that the population of the United States would become stationary with about 200,000,000 persons in the year 2020. Now that calculation has been completely upset, not because it was inaccurate, but because the trends have changed. The birth rate has fallen more rapidly than any one could foresee a few years ago. Statisticians now seem to be agreed that a stationary population will be reached about 1960 and that there will be a considerable decline from that period until the end of the century.

In 1931 the birth rate declined to 17.8 per thousand of population. A birth rate of 16.7 is necessary to maintain a stationary population with the present life expectation of about 60 years. If the present downward trend continues, therefore, it is only a matter of a few years until the number of daughters born will be only sufficient to replace the mothers of the present day when they reach middle age. In most American cities the birth rate is already considerably below the point necessary for maintenance of a stationary population. But an excess of births over deaths in rural districts keeps these cities from an actual decline. The birth rate in farm families is still 55 per cent above the point necessary to maintain the existing population.

For this reason the shift of people between farms and cities may have a vital influence on population trends of the future. For many years the cities have been draining young men and women from the farms at a tremendous cost to agricultural communities. But at present the shift is back to the farm. If this trend should be continued, which seems improbable, the national birth rate might increase once more. Children are often considered an asset on the farm. Certainly they are not as great expense as they are in the cities. If prosperity returns to industrial centers and another drain upon rural population takes place, further sharp declines in the birth rate may be expected. In that event the Nation may find itself with a declining population within a very short period.

Governments are aware of the vital influence of farm life upon their growth of population. This is one of the foremost reasons why European governments maintain excessive tariff rates on agricultural crops and pay bounties to farmers. Birth rates in most European cities have fallen to extremely low levels. If a thriving farm population were not maintained a slow process of national suicide would develop. Thus far this problem seems to have had little influence upon the agricultural policy of the American Government, but it will become more prominent if city birth rates continue to fall.

In view of these conditions all estimates of future population are mere guesses. About the only thing of which one may be certain is that the outcome of the depression will have a vital bearing on the population of the future.



Watch Your Step, Japan!

POST HASTE

If the prospective isolation of Japan is not enough to make Peru pause advice will be unavailing.

Does rural life dull the imagination? The 4,000 farmers besieging the Nebraska legislature presented a petition making only ninety-two demands.

The Senate's double summersault on prohibition would have been incongruous if it hadn't been in Congress.

Agriculture and industry were equally alert to expand for wartime needs and equally blind to the necessity of curtailing postwar activity.

What's wrong with this picture? A murderer is properly disposed of, but if he is both a murderer and a madman he must be preserved and cared for.

Among the boomerangs of farm mortgage defaults it is found that $1,000,000,000 of them are held by retired farmers as their principal source of income.

One of the highest Japanese honors is permission to carry a cane in the presence of the emperor. And we try to figure out Japanese reasoning on the conquest of Manchuria.

What's the use? King George spends his evenings sorting his stamp collection and Queen Mary knits.

If the farmers can organize to prevent foreclosures they can cooperate for a reduction of production, the surest way to better prices.

New York State's proposed beer bill reserves a portion of the tax for educational campaigns on the evils of drink. The new toast will be: Drink hearty to help the temperance fund.

With a White House dictator and a King for our Senate committee, Rome will have nothing on little old D. C.

All the public debt which Andy Mellon paid off is rapidly being replaced. It will make the old place look natural to Carter Glass.

When Greek meets Greek—Senate Democratic Leader Robinson moves to kill Speaker Garner's publicity provision for R. F. C. loans.

An additional $25,000 is needed to continue the Huey Long-Overton mardi gras. If the Senate declines New Orleans will pay for the show.

One explanation of the vote on repeal may be that the Senate heard what the country thinks of its 3.02 per cent wine.

The new European raid on the dollar is not dangerous. A submarine attack from Capitol Hill is the only one to be feared.

There is a growing impression that the indecision of Senators Glass and Swanson regarding Cabinet posts is not due to a rivalry as to which one will deed his seat to Harry Byrd.

Our advice is to do your shopping early with the R. F. C. before the Tennessee Valley truck backs up.

PAUL HUDSON.

LINCOLN'S HOME TOWN

From the Christian Science Monitor.

This is Springfield, Ill., and every schoolboy and schoolgirl in the world knows that Springfield is the home of Lincoln.

We leave the train, stroll a scant two blocks up town to the old public square, and Lincoln memories crowd in upon us.

"Can it be," you ask yourself, "that in this modest city of some 80,000 people lived and moved and wrought one of the greatest of men?"

Most precisely it can be, and it is, all true. Somehow we have idealized and romanced in our minds about this thing, until we have given the picture heroic setting, when, after all, we are in just a pleasant, up-to-date Illinois city, a Midwestern, small metropolis, with a big square and some ten-story buildings, shiny cars and crowds of people hurrying to and fro, intent on buying goods, satisfying material wants, meeting friends, planning trips, new business ventures, and moved by just the same things that motivate Americans in any part of the country. It's not much different to other cities of its size. Where is this historic stage, this grand setting, for the great Emancipator? So you say to your disappointed self as you move about with the Springfield crowds, and wonder why no one accosts you and offers to point out the Lincoln home or take you over the ways Lincoln walked.

But, wait a minute! Whether it fits your mood and your expectancy or not, it is the very same historic spot on which Lincoln walked and lived, and here you are in the midst of old-time Lincoln haunts. This square is hallowed with his memories. That weather-beaten public building in the middle is the old Statehouse, that stood there in his day, and up in the main room in the corner is where the governor of his day had his office, and it was in this office that Lincoln had his headquarters as President-elect for three months before he left for Washington.

And, while the buildings are now mostly new and modern and somewhat metropolitan, yet some of these smaller ones stood there in his day and, so far as romance is concerned, Springfield is ten times as auspicious looking now as in Lincoln's day.

The Springfield that Lincoln knew was a drab, dusty, unimpressive town; yet, walking its streets and looking out on these same prairies and cornfields, the tall young lawyer thought those great thoughts about the rights of men and the destiny of his country and dreamed of the great part he was to play upon the world's stage.

Now as we drive northward along a superb boulevard, we have been noticing that tall, white marble shaft far above the trees and we know it is the Lincoln Monument.

Illinois has done nobly in the honoring of her greatest son. Formerly, the inside of the tomb was cluttered with a mass of relics, scattered documents and photos, all jumbled together. Now, these have all been taken to a proper museum and instead one walks into a beautiful sarcophagus of marble and onyx, round an octagon, down marble passageways, and at every turn there are small bronze replicas of the famous Lincoln statues.

Arriving at the cenotaph, one sees a soldier boy standing guard. Here one may lay his wreath and pause in uncovered tribute to the man who freed a race of men, saved his country and reunited it after one of the most terrible civil wars in history, and who was later a martyr to the cause.

Outside the trees bend heavily their arching branches, as if to guard the mighty hero; the elms sway in the breeze, and just across the way come the breath of new-mown hay, the call of the crow, the scent of early June corn—all just as he knew it in the long ago.

THE ROAD TO REPEAL

From the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

If the House, as now expected from the action by the Democratic caucus, follows the Senate's example next Monday and votes to submit prohibition repeal to State conventions, Congress and probably the courts will still have to deal with a difficult question on which the Constitution and legislative rules shed little light. It is the manner in which these conventions shall be called, whether by Congress or by the legislatures, with which is bound up the question of how the delegates shall be elected. Shall they be chosen by districts or by the State at large? And who shall foot the bill?

The Constitution gives Congress power to submit proposed amendments either to the legislatures or to conventions. It is silent regarding the method of creating such conventions. This alternative plan has never been used. These conventions must be created either by Congress or by the legislatures. If the matter is left to the legislatures, long delay is foreseen. While most of the legislatures are now in session, they are approaching their end.

To insure early action it has been proposed that Congress assume this responsibility, for which there is no precedent or direct mandate in the Constitution. There have been several suggestions as to how far Congress should exercise this authority.

Hope of early repeal is based on several tenuous factors. Congress, against strong opposition, will have to ordain the convention procedure for the States. Then its action will have to be upheld by the highest court, for it is certain to be challenged on the score of constitutionality. Then, after surmounting these obstacles, repeal will have to run the gantlet of the State conventions, thirteen of which, acting together, can block ratification.

The road to repeal is beset with pitfalls. And submission by Congress will mark only the beginning of what may be a long and arduous journey.

POST EXCHANGE.

FIDDLING CONGRESS.

Congress is labeled "The Merry-Go-Round;"
Whoever so named it in judgment was sound:
Republicans, Democrats, Technocrats, all
Running in circles and courting a fall;
Gold men and Silver men, dry men and wet,
Inflaters, deflaters, have done little yet,
Save differ and dodge, as well as they're able,
In one much confused, unintelligent babel.
The lame duck says this, the sound duck says that,
But the devil-a-one knows where he is at.
Some cry for free coinage, some dollars worth less;
The many are getting less now, is my guess.
As Nero once fiddled when Rome was afire,
So Congress now fiddles and rouses our ire.
The disagreed lawgivers only seem bent
On coming out safely from wherein they went.
What will the harvest be? I must confess
Wise men know little, and others know less.

HIS MONUMENT.

How far the shadow of this shaft is spread!
From sea to sea; across mysterious deeps;
Where the Grand Canyon cryptically keeps
Voiceless communion with her ageless dead;
And where Niagara's waters flash and thread
The sunlit air, or she, a mourner weeps
Great frozen tears; where, expanding, sweeps
Old Mississippi from his cradle-bed!
So far and farther sounds the patriot name
Of him—a Man—who would not be a king
When kings were claiming to stand next to God.
The kings are gone; we seek their thrones in vain;
Where priest and courtier used their praise to sing,
We find free men uprising from this sod.

ABOUT COFFEE.

Although over fifty countries produce the humble but necessary coffee bean, the world looks to Latin America for 90 per cent of its coffee needs, according to Miguel Lopes Pumarejo. The discovery of coffee as a beverage is sometimes accredited to an Arabian goat-herder who observed that his four-footed charges, after browsing on coffee plants, became unusually sleek and healthy. Upon sampling the coffee cherries, each containing twin coffee beans, he was disappointed. He then tried roasting the beans and brewing them in water and the result was flavorsome, stimulating and healthful.

Some historians claim that coffee was brought to Arabia from Kaffa, Africa, which may account for its name. From Arabia the beverage spread to Constantinople, and eventually to Europe. Some assert that coffee was first brought to the New World by the Dutch, while others give credit to the French. In any event, the fact remains that Central and South America produces nine-tenths of the world's coffee supply today, of which the United States imports more than any other country. The people of the United States consume approximately 87,000,000,000 cups of it every year.

THE WEAVER OF SNOW.

(The three winds of winter: The wind of death that cometh in tumult, the weaver of snow; the dead wind, or black frost.—Ian Macaodh.)

At his loom swift and silent the weaver of snow
Plied his shuttle of cloud, and in silvery fold
Fell the web of his weaving o'er chill earth below.
Then the busy loom stopped, for the weaver grew cold.

Before him the death wind went howling and groaning;
He swept through the wood and the oak trees laid low;
Then came the still weaver and hushed all their moaning,
And behind him the black wind crept mournful and slow.

The weaver's web shimmers in pure dazzling whiteness,
Hiding scars whereby man has marked earth for his own;
His loom clothes the world in a garment of brightness,
Like the splendor of glory that streams from God's throne.

March Vote Means Much to Royalists

Two Dozen Former Rulers Hope for Hitler Gains Through Germany.

BERLIN, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—In the waiting room of the German republic are some two dozen former royal rulers of various states straining their ears for each morsel of monarchical gossip.

Particularly are they hearkening for word of gains by Chancellor Adolf Hitler's Nazis and Alfred Hugenberg's Nationalists. A coalition majority of these parties in the Reichstag to be elected March 5 would hearten the royalist elements immensely.

Upheavals in Portugal, Spain, Austria and Russia generally forced royalty to seek sanctuary outside their native lands. The reverse was true in Germany, where more than a score of former rulers still reside, many of them on their former princely estates. Some even draw pensions from the present government.

Interest naturally centers upon the family of former Kaiser Wilhelm, who, despite his exile in Doorn, still holds a tight rein on the members of his household.

Within recent months the former Hohenzollern princes are showing themselves in public—and to news photographers—with considerable regularity, while one section of the press and public openly works for the restoration of the monarchy.

• • • •

THE many appearances of the former crown prince and his brothers at public functions is regarded by the republican sections of the press and public as part of a campaign to "sell" the idea to the general public.

People are beginning to talk, too, about Prince Wilhelm Frederick of Hohenzollern. As eldest son of the former crown prince, he is in the direct line from his imperial grandfather, "the wood chopper of Doorn." The young man will be 27 years old next July 4.

In Bavaria the former Crown Prince Rupprecht is openly urged to resume the place of his father as king of Bavaria and is hailed with all possible pomp and ceremony when he visits various towns.

The situation, slightly modified, is true in Wurttemberg, where the Duke of Urach has the support of a small section of the people who would restore the monarchy. The duke lives in his castle at Stuttgart, set in the midst of a vast estate.

In Saxony the monarchists lean toward the second son of the late King Friedrich August, who died last year. The legal heir renounced his title and entered the priesthood.

• • • •

LONDON, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The Reuters News Agency correspondent at Doorn, Holland, telegraphed today that the former kaiser's wife, Princess Hermine, left with a secretary for Berlin with the announced object of opening a fancy goods fair there. The correspondent continues:

"However, it is considered highly probable that the princess will endeavor to effect meetings with leaders of the Nationalist coalition (Hitler) government, others in Nationalistic circles, and former members of the nobility, who will be invited to a tea party, at which no doubt the actual political problems regarding possible restoration of the monarchy will be discussed."

The message states the former kaiser is in excellent health, cutting wood daily. He is receiving numerous telegrams from all parts of the world, it added, "but mostly from Germany, from Nationalistic circles there."

Deaths in Pompeii's Port Area Revealed

Pompeii, Italy, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Excavations of what was once the port of Pompeii are bringing to light houses, stores, wine shops, skeletons of ancient mariners and gold jewelry.

The excavations, under direction of Prof. Maiuri, superintendent of antiquities of the Naples area, have penetrated into the portion of Pompeii on the Gulf of Naples, outside the city walls.

The harbor has been filled up for centuries and the shore line now is some distance away.

The houses are of a poorer quality than those of Pompeii proper. One of them was a tavern. In it were three skeletons of men who evidently were overwhelmed as they sat sipping wine.

In the center of the big room is an enormous receptacle, supposedly for wine that was sold by draught.

The excavations are difficult because the earth is honeycombed with subterranean streams.

Germans Keep Alive Colonial Empire Idea

Hamburg, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—To keep the colonial empire idea alive, the German-Africa line is running a two-months excursion to what formerly was German Southwest Africa and now is a British protectorate.

Calls are to be made at Windhoek, the territorial capital, and at Swakopmund so as to "show old German settlers that the reich has not forgotten them," says the program drafted by Friedrich von Lindequist, former governor of the colony.

Marriage Increase Attributed to Dole

Melbourne, Australia, Feb. 18 (A.P.). Although the marriage rate in Australia is increasing, the birth rate has sharply declined.

Marriage increase is due to the dole, many unemployed couples marrying because allowances for married people are higher than the rates for a single man or woman.

Government agents say also that throughout Australia there is an increasing disinclination to work while the dole can be obtained and many proffered jobs are disdained.

Italy Seeking Savings

Rome, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—To attract savings from Italians in the United States, Argentina, France and elsewhere the government allows them interest at 3.36 per cent, compared to the 2.76 per cent paid home depositors.

Heads of Hohenzollern Line

German Royalists, hopefully awaiting a nationalistic victory in the German Reichstag elections on March 5, would look to these men to govern a restored monarchy. The former emperor, Wilhelm, is shown (center) as the "wood chopper of Doorn," flanked (right) by the former crown prince and (left) by the latter's eldest son, Prince Wilhelm Frederick, 26-year-old heir of the royal house.

FROM A SENATOR'S DIARY

Being the Day-by-Day Observations of a "Member-at-Large" Set Down for His Own Satisfaction.

By the 97th Senator

Wednesday.

POOR Jack Garner! It is such a disappointment to him that he was elected Vice President. He almost broke down and cried when we counted the electoral vote and he could no longer doubt the news. Tears came to his eyes when his friendly enemy, Bert Snell, arose to congratulate him amid applause from both Republicans and Democrats.

"I may as well say now publicly what I have said before privately," said Jack. "I would have preferred to remain Speaker of this House." Emotion almost overpowered him as he assured the cheering representatives that, though his intellect and body would have to be transferred to the Senate, his "heart would always be in the House."

I don't like Jack to feel that way about coming over to our end of the Capitol. I want him to bring his heart with him. The Senate is a nice, clubby institution, more intimate and friendly than the overgrown and densely populated House. I know every one in the Senate likes Jack personally and will try to make him feel happy. Charley Curtis is all ready to turn over to him his comfortable little office just off the Senate chamber, and perhaps he can be persuaded to leave behind a few of his numerous gavels for Jack's use. If homesickness overcomes him perhaps it can be arranged to let him off for an hour or two for an occasional visit among his old cronies. No doubt Kay Pittman will be glad to take the gavel any time Jack feels the pangs of nostalgia.

I realize that changing jobs is something of a wrench to any man, especially after he has served 30 years in the old one. But after Jack gets used to the Vice Presidency, I am sure he will like it much better than being Speaker. It is a much easier job. There is almost no worry connected with it. In fact, after his inauguration he will hardly need to open his mouth except at banquets, corner stone layings and dedications.

Several of Jack's House colleagues are moving over to the Senate with him—Gus Lonergan, of Connecticut, who defeated Hiran Bingham; John Overton, of Louisiana, one of Huey Long's lieutenants, and Dieterich, of Illinois, who beat Otis Glenn. I haven't noticed any of them weeping over their misfortune and I am willing to bet they won't leave their hearts behind them.

Thursday.

JIMMY WADSWORTH has a habit of speaking frankly, which is supposed to be fatal in politics. Some of his pussyfooting friends say it is worse than a habit—it is a positive mania for committing political suicide. Just when his political future appears brightest, they say he will find occasion to speak his mind in such a fashion as to wreck his prospects. He can always be counted upon to do that, so the weasel word experts contend.

It is not surprising, therefore, on the eve of his return to Congress, with a presidential boom in the offing, when he is being hailed as a prospective Moses to lead the Republican party out of the wilderness, to hear of his making one of his "indiscreet speeches." He minced no words in telling what he thought of the way the Government is being run. He spoke quite freely of his disgust over the confusion, delay, lack of plan, political jockeying and general futility among his future colleagues. That kind of a speech, as Dave Barry can testify, is not the kind to assure him a hearty welcome when he takes his seat in the House after March 4.

Jimmy Wadsworth was one of the ablest and most courageous members of the Senate for twelve years prior to 1927. But he refused to bow in meek submission to the Antisaloon League. As a consequence, the league put up a candidate against him when he ran for reelection to the Senate, with Bob Wagner, as his opponent in 1926. The league's candidate polled enough votes to throw the election to Wagner, who was wetter even than Wadsworth, but the league's thirst for vengeance was satisfied and its spokesmen were happy. Since that time Wadsworth has been devoting much of his time to the wet cause and it begins to look as though he would "get even" with his dry foes.

Last fall he was elected as a wet Republican from the Thirty-ninth New York District. Since then he has been repeatedly mentioned as the Republicans' best bet for 1936.

And now he has gone and spilled the beans again; that is, in the opinion of pussy-footing politicians who think that the only way to meet an issue is to straddle it. I'm not so sure. I'm inclined to think that the country will enjoy some plain speaking of the Jim Wadsworth variety.

Friday.

PROSPECTS of a lively shindy among House Democrats over picking a new Speaker to succeed Jack Garner are vanishing, with the betting still favoring Henry Rainey, the silver-haired floor leader, from Illinois. According to the grapevine which brings us the news from the south end of the Capitol, a peaceful settlement is to be effected by the following procedure:

Roosevelt will appoint Cordell Hull, of Tennessee, to the Cabinet, thus creating a vacancy in the Senate.

The Governor of Tennessee will then appoint Joe Byrns to succeed Hull in the Senate, thus eliminating one of the principal contenders from the speakership contest.

Bob Crosser, of Ohio, will get a complimentary vote for Speaker from the Buckeye delegation, after which the Ohioans will throw their support to Rainey.

Rainey will get the support of the North, the West and some of the border States, insuring his election. A motion will then be offered to make his election unanimous, in which the forces supporting McDuffie, of Alabama, will acquiesce.

The Rainey forces will then back McDuffie for the floor leadership and McDuffie will be elected to that position.

Charmingly simple! Precedent and seniority will be upheld, sectional friction will be avoided and everything will be lovely.

There is only one flaw in the setup. If Rainey wins the speakership he will have to give up his place on the Ways and Means Committee. Under the seniority rule, the chairmanship of the committee then would go to Bob Doughton, arch foe of the sales tax. Some Democrats shudder at that prospect.

Saturday.

"BIG JIM" FARLEY is not only a diamond in the rough, but also a gem of purest ray serene to the Democrats. They are under the deepest debt of gratitude to him. He is a great national chairman and campaign manager and he also is a genius at the pie counter. No one, in my humble opinion, can surpass him in the distribution of apple sauce and molasses.

Take his speech at Miami the other day with job-seekers at the right of him, job-seekers at the left of him, job-seekers in front of him—and job-seekers in his rear. It was a perfect pattern of what a political generalissimo, anxious to preserve harmony yet imbued with high ideals, ought to say under the circumstances. He will advise Mr. Roosevelt to turn down all candidates for appointment without "full evidence of their honesty, ability and devotion to Democratic ideals, no matter how many or how influential are the indorsements presented." Brave words and loud applause. But on the other hand, he hopes to work out a systematic way "to reward deserving members of our party and at the same time give to the Nation servants devoted to the Nation's welfare."

Lame Duck Brookhart, who ran third in a field of three when he sought reelection last fall in Iowa, insists that the Blaine resolution for prohibition repeal can be passed only over his dead body. I am told, confidentially, that the Wets are secretly backing Brookhart's fight. They don't want the Blaine resolution, or any other legislative monstrosity like it, to go through and much prefer to wait for a decision after March 4.

Peiping, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Authorities of the palace museum in Forbidden City have provided a fire and water proof vault for safeguarding the national treasures in case of rioting or war. Newspapers report the staff has already packed books, paintings and manuscripts in strong boxes ready for instant removal.

Power Held by Women in Spain's Polls

Majority of Electorate Is of Fair Sex, It Is Shown by Census.

By A. EDWIN STUNTZ.

MADRID, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Spain's first feminine voting sector, constituting a majority of the electorate, looms as the question mark in the significant municipal elections scheduled for April 23.

All party leaders are angling for feminine support in this initial appearance of Spanish women at the ballot boxes. But none has been willing to predict just where the bulk of the new vote will go.

The electoral census lists eligible voters at a total of 12,548,499. Of these, 6,509,807 are women.

Some leaders believe that party platforms on woman suffrage may serve as an index to the political trend. Recalling that the Socialist party on the left and the Catholic parties on the right fought long and ardently to speed up the census so that women might vote in the coming elections, these experts argue that the great majority of women's votes will fall into one or the other of these widely separated camps.

Whether this reasoning is faulty will be decided in the elections, but all parties agree that the women's votes give the municipal elections an importance and uncertainty rivaling that of the city balloting, which caused the downfall of the monarchy in April, 1931.

THE elections will fill half the number of seats in the municipal councils of all cities and towns in Spain. They will be the first municipal elections since the country voted against King Alfonso.

Moreover, the people must replace 17,522 municipal councilmen who lost their jobs under a recent congressional act. This measure dictated that all councilmen holding office because of lack of election opposition had to resign.

The law was aimed at what was termed "the municipal political boss system," and affected 2,906 municipalities.

The municipal elections are expected by party spokesmen like Indalecio Prieto, Socialist minister of public works, and Alvaro de Albornoz, Radical Socialist minister of justice, to have a direct effect on the life of the present National Congress.

Prieto said the balloting might well determine how much longer the present coalition government will stay in power. He explained that a heavy assault on the Socialist and Leftist Republican seats in the municipal governments could not be ignored by the national government, while a Leftist triumph would indicate that the people generally are satisfied with national things as they are.

ALEJANDRO LERROUX, leader of the Radical Republican party, seemingly indorses the view of the significance of the vote. He has asked all his party's national deputies to plunge into the city campaigns in the hope that enough Radical Republicans will win to permit him to challenge the national supremacy of the Socialist coalition.

Albornoz and Prieto agree that the elections should settle too whether the government should call congressional by-elections. They believe a Leftist triumph in the cities will be tantamount to a popular decision to retain the present congress until its term runs out, without attempting to fill vacancies.

Zaleskie Now Banker

GALLERY GLIMPSES

By ROBERT C. ALBRIGHT

SPEAKER JOHN NANCE GARNER, who has had a merry time of it these last two years, smashing gavels and handing down ultimatums that a mostly subservient House can take or leave, is about to undergo a change of character.

It may not be a conscious change. To the unobserving, it may be no change at all or at most only a surface change. Notwithstanding, it will be violent and complete. That much is as certain as the fact that on March 4 he will cease to preside over the House and start to preside over the Senate.

Knowing Speaker Garner, we do not expect him to wield a Senate gavel any less vigorously than he pounded several to pieces in the House. Neither do we anticipate he will be any less firm in his utterings. But they will be ineffectual poundings, and utterings without omen.

He may struggle, as "Hell and Maria" Dawes struggled, against the inevitable. But "Hell and Maria" Dawes became Vice President Dawes, "Egg Charley" Curtis became Vice President Curtis, and next month Speaker Jack must of necessity become Vice President Garner.

Nobody knows just how ineffectual a presiding officer of the Senate can be, until there is a showdown between the chair and the Senate, or, for that matter, between the chair and an individual senator. With Vice President Curtis, this last humiliation did not come until the closing night of the last session. With President Pro Tem Moses, it has been a perennial sort of a thing—a serial story of give and take, mostly take.

MAYBE it is because he is a "lame duck," and maybe it is because senators can not quite forget that he never actually was elected president pro tem., but Senator George H. Moses has traveled a particularly rough road these past few weeks on those many occasions he relieved Vice President Curtis in the chair.

There was the time during the Barry trial that Moses, who was presiding, proposed the Barry matter be referred to the rules committee.

For this mild suggestion he was called down by Senator Henry F. Ashurst, colorful Arizonan.

"A point of order," said Senator Ashurst. "The chair has no right to argue with the chair. If the chair wishes to argue, he should take his place on the floor of the Senate."

There was the time when Senator George W. Norris waited patiently while Moses delivered a lengthy discourse on Senator David A. Reed's right to alter a motion, then bluntly observed:

"I do not know why the chair enters into that long argument. Nobody has questioned the right of the senator from Pennsylvania to modify his motion."

And there was the time when Senator Joseph T. Robinson caught Moses chatting with another senator when still another senator was clamoring to be heard.

"A point of order," said Senator Robinson. "I make the point of order that the chair is out of order."

But Moses, gifted at repartee, bides his time in the chair to pay back any untoward insolence. On one occasion, when he had been particularly harassed by Senator Ashurst, who accused him of "interrupting himself," Moses held his tongue. Later he addressed the Senate:

"May the chair make a suggestion, with the kind permission of the senator from Arizona?"

Said Ashurst:

"I cheerfully grant permission."

AND this is the irreverent atmosphere into which Speaker Garner, whose word is law in the House, but whose word will not be law in the Senate, will be precipitated on March 4. And this is the sort of atmosphere that will force Speaker Garner to undergo a change of character. For the Senate does not change.

Nor will the conflict always be in this light vein. We call to mind Senator James Couzens' little altercation with Vice President Curtis on the last night of the last session. Senator Couzens accused Senator James E. Watson of using a parliamentary "trick" to get through a certain appropriation.

The skit follows:

Vice President Curtis—The chair will announce that the senator can not accuse another senator of resorting to tricks.

Senator Couzens—I will ask the chair, as a parliamentary inquiry, what is a "trick?"

Vice President Curtis—The chair is not here for that purpose.

Senator Couzens—Then I do not intend to abide by the chair's decision that the use of the word "trick" is a violation of the rule, unless I know what the chair's definition of the word is.

Vice President Curtis—The Senator will stay within the rules, or he will be called down.

Senator Couzens—I will stay within the rules, but I will have the Senate pass upon the rules, and not the Vice President.

Letters to the Editor.

Civil Liberties Union's Red Ideas Attacked by Gen. Fries

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Let me congratulate you in the name of all good citizens for the fine editorial in The Washington Post of February 17, entitled: "Mr. Roosevelt's Escape." The following statement from that editorial exactly explains the situation:

"The chill of horror that runs through the country when a President is assailed is quickly followed by a burst of fury, but this, in turn, soon evaporates, and Communists, anarchists and other dangerous criminals are allowed to run at large."

But that attempt on the life of President-elect Roosevelt is only a forerunner of the plans of the Communists and others working with them to destroy this Nation by wholesale assassination and murder just as they have done in Russia. It is time the American people took to account men sitting in honored positions that uphold this sort of thing.

When the Fish committee was investigating Communist activities in the United States, Mr. Roger Baldwin, spokesman and one of the two directors (apparently what is usually called an executive secretary), of the American Civil Liberties Union, when testifying on force, violence, murder, &c., was asked the following questions, which are given with their replies:

The chairman—Does your organization uphold the right of a citizen or alien—it does not make any difference which—to advocate murder?

Mr. Baldwin—Yes.

The chairman—Or assassination?

Mr. Baldwin—Yes.

The chairman—Does your organization uphold the right of an American citizen to advocate force and violence for the overthrow of the Government?

Mr. Baldwin—Certainly; in so far as mere advocacy is concerned.

The chairman—Does it uphold the right of an alien in this country to urge the overthrow and advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence?

Mr. Baldwin—Precisely on the same basis as any citizen.

The chairman—You do uphold the right of an alien to advocate the overthrow of the Government by force and violence?

Mr. Baldwin—Sure; certainly. It is the healthiest kind of thing for a country, of course, to have free speech—unlimited.

What can you expect from foreigners, people of second rate mentality and plain murderers and cut-throats when an American organization such as the American Civil Liberties Union claims the right to preach the overthrow of our Government by force and violence? That testimony was given more than two years ago, and I have neither seen nor heard that a single member of the American Civil Liberties Union or its supporters in the colleges and pulpits has uttered a word against that testimony.

What do the American people think of an organization that, according to its spokesman, upholds the right to advocate murder, assassination and the overthrow of the Government by force and violence? When the American people wake up and shut such organizations as this out of existence and put the teachers of violence behind bars, then there will be less attempts on the life of our Presidents and other public men.

AMOS A. FRIES,
Major General, U. S. A. (ret'd).

No Time to Blow Bubbles Said of Shoals "Pipe Dream"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: If this latest Muscle Shoals proposal is just another "trial balloon" it ought, in my humble opinion, to be punctured promptly and with sufficient force to convince some of our Government-ownership enthusiasts that they are a long way from Russia.

In that land, which has achieved the ultimate in political tyranny, on the Dneiper River, a crew of "technocrats" have just sunk a hundred and fifty millions dollars in a somewhat similar political pipe dream; and the people from whom this money was confiscated are now starving, and will continue to starve. For others there may be hope; for them there is none. Such are the results of government in business.

Young college idealists who presume to advise Mr. Roosevelt in such matters would be rendering the Nation a service if they could impress practical, experienced business men with any new workable plan for Muscle Shoals that would help us to dispose of this relic of war hysteria in such a way that future taxes on it might repay our investment in it; but to propose a grandiose socialistic "experiment," involving untold millions of additional public money at a time when we are apparently unable to balance our budget, and are facing debt repudiation at home and abroad, would, in the light of common sense, approach about the nearest to political insanity and financial suicide that could well be imagined.

The main object of the works at Muscle Shoals is represented by the hundred million dollar nitrate and steam plants which are now admitted by all as being obsolete and of no commercial value, present or future. But for the fifty-million-dollar Wilson dam, the whole thing would be forgotten; and even this dam hasn't enough real value to be worth fighting over.

The efficiency of modern coal-fired power-generating units is such that a kilowatt of current is produced with only a pound and a half of coal, representing a fuel cost of less than one-tenth of a cent per kilowatt. Water power is therefore a negligible factor in producing cheap current. The great initial cost of hydroelectric equipment is not justified where cheap coal is available, as it is in Alabama and Tennessee.

There is not a town or village of a thousand population in that part of the country that is not already provided with current, selling as low in some cases as 3 and 4 cents per kilowatt. Very few rural communities are without it. Unless it is proposed to run power lines to the cabins of every mountaineer or Negro cotton picker it is difficult to understand where any need exists for current that is not already being supplied by established concerns.

This talk about "holding the utilities in check" is only a smoke screen. Said President Hoover in 1931: "The power problem is not to be solved by the Federal Government going into the power business. The remedy for abuses in the conduct of that industry lies in regulation and not by the Federal Government entering upon the business itself."

The States and not the National Government should take care of reforestation. For years we have had entirely too much Federal financing of developments that are wholly sectional in character, and this practice ought to be stopped.

Exciting the public imagination and arousing hopes at this time in vast schemes for Government employment of thousands of people will bear no good fruit. Such tactics will only create controversy, destroy the confidence of private investors and delay instead of hasten the return of better times.

What investors hope to hear on March 4 is that our own producers are to be protected from destructive foreign competition, that our currency system will not be tampered with, and that there will be no confiscatory class taxation. When Mr. Roosevelt can give us definite assurance on these points the road to recovery will be clear and the early success of his administration will be assured by the cooperation of Republicans and Democrats alike. In any event let us remember that this is no time for blowing bubbles. NEWELL.

Prayer Is Urged To Lift Depression

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: At the end of the second decade of the present century, when unemployment was disturbing our national life, the Wall Street Journal had an editorial to this effect: What we need today to stabilize ourselves is some of the old-time religion in the home, where grace is said at meals and family prayers prevail daily, and the work is hurried through on Wednesday evening so that the neighborhood prayer meeting may be sustained. If we needed it then, how much more do we need it now?

The people who follow such a program are the best people, down at bottom, that we have. They are honest, reliable, straight thinking, and are sure to be on the right side of all questions where morality and the best interests of the community are to be considered. They may not be well schooled, but they know their Bible and strive to follow its precepts.

The present writer knew one of these men whose school life was measured by five terms in the log schoolhouse, but he knew his Bible, and it is said of him today, "He did more to influence the community for good than any man there, even including the various ministers who served the church there." He was not rich, but he had large faith in God, in his fellows and in himself.

Given this attitude the decalogue will be his rule of life and his neighbor will always get a square deal. Such men were the founders of this country and if the rich heritage given to us is to be passed on to the coming generations, we of today, must qualify as worthy holders of this trust.

Individual life can not be massed as is being tried in Russia, with any hope of continuing our institutions. Hope beckons us, ambition lures us and the return of better days can be hastened by taking stock of ourselves, determining to step up as we step ahead, into the best that it is possible for us to attain. That can be hastened by a universal respect for law, the courts, the Sabbath, ourselves and others—Lincoln's method of life. ARTHUR GIBSON MOORE.

Alfonso Hunts Tigers After Polo Injuries

Genoa, Italy, Feb. 18. (A.P.).—Former King Alfonso of Spain revealed here before leaving for Ceylon to hunt tigers, that injuries sustained in a polo game have forced him to forego strenuous sports.

He suffered a broken rib and serious injuries to the diaphragm when thrown from his pony in a game in France.

Hunting tigers offers thrills without violent exercise, he explained. He will return in about two months and probably take up permanent residence at Florence.

St. Paul's Will Lose 70 Years of Grime

London, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The interior of St. Paul's Cathedral is to be scrubbed clean of 70 years' accumulation of dust and grime.

An attempt to restore the nave and aisles to their original lightness has just been completed after a year of scrubbing.

The effect is so startling and so appreciated by visitors that the church authorities have decided to give the entire building a going over.

Pierre Cot Asks Deals by Nations

French Debt Spokesman Does Not Shy at Revision of Postwar Pacts.

PARIS, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Pierre Cot, 38-year-old undersecretary for foreign affairs, who has been talking about debts and the Manchurian question with members of the American Embassy, is one Frenchman to reach high office who does not shy off when revision of postwar treaties is mentioned.

He long has advocated changes and this has been one element in the branding of Deputy Cot as a radical radical-socialist by the stand-pat element here.

M. Cot was taken into the Paul-Boncour cabinet in December and told to keep in touch with the League of Nations, the World Court and foreign opinion in general.

As a strong advocate of disarmament, M. Cot feels that the world has signed sufficient security pacts to enable it to start pruning armies. In this matter, also, he often is singled out among French politicians as very "advanced."

But he insists it is only a question of common sense.

"I simply say, along with Edouard Herriot, that treaties are not eternal and that they must be modified to fit the rhythm and necessities of life, although one can not admit unilateral denunciation," is the way he puts it.

M. Cot, a lawyer, is serving his second term in the chamber of deputies. He represents the district of Chambery, which lies at the foot of Mont Blanc.

He is a small bespectacled man of nervous disposition who gets as much information from books as he does from life in the raw. His library in his Paris apartment is a large two-story room lined from floor to ceiling with books.

THE DIPLOMATIC POUCH

By HAROLD J. T. HORAN

Woe to the Vanquished.

THE way of the Central American diplomat is stonier than the transgressor's. He has either to submit to the caprices of a dictator and see his erstwhile secretary groomed to take his place, like Dominican Minister Roberto Despradel, or like the Charge d'Affaires of Nicaragua, Dr. Luis M. Debayle, he finds himself the victims of a political campaign of spoliation.

The president-dictator of Santo Domingo was so struck with the mental agility and inventiveness of Ulisses Espaillat, the second secretary of the Dominican Legation, that he promptly promoted him two grades in rank, and now, it is said, meditates making him minister in place of the present incumbent, who seems destined for Mexico.

Counselor Espaillat has an American wife and he is ambitious to wear the diplomatic immunities of minister.

The case of the Nicaraguan charge is an unusual one. He sacrificed a very lucrative practice as surgeon in one of the leading hospitals of Philadelphia to accept the post of charge d'affaires after his uncle, Juan Bautistia Sacasa became president of the republic. The role he played in the election of his uncle is said to be very considerable, particularly with certain aspects of the elections that were of great anxiety to Senor Cacasa.

Dr. Sacasa's first official act on becoming president was to withhold the accumulated funds owing to the charge d'affaires in Washington as a means of bringing about his resignation. Dr. Debayle has created several powerful friends here in Washington, who admire the forthright manner in which he has administered the affairs of Nicaragua over the few months since he has been here. His loyal desire to serve the best interests of his country and promote the best possible relations with the United States have not been unnoticed by the officials of the Department of State here, and he will undoubtedly furnish several interesting developments in the history of his country, whether he remains in the Nicaraguan diplomatic service or not.

The Prince of Wales is one of the most ardent press clipping "fans" in the world. His collection is more than 40 bound volumes. One of the prince's suite has a job which consists in collating and arranging all the clippings from every newspaper in the world which has to do with his activities. His last trip to the United States was responsible for a volume about one foot thick.

Apropos of this collection the latest story about "P. W." as he is familiarly known in Piccadilly is typical of his popularity amongst every class. He was leaving the Embassy Club one afternoon with his brother, George, and started to drive his own car. In backing up, he tore off the bumper of the motor in back of him. It happened to be a taxi and the taxi driver started a stream of apostrophy and abuse. Suddenly the prince jumped out and the taxi driver recognized him. Off went his hat and he said:

"Your highness can smash the car if he wishes."

The prince instead handed him a £5 note which would more than repay the damage that had been done.

"Oh, thank you, your highness. This is one five quid I won't ever spend."

"Why not?" said the prince.

"I want to frame it and leave it to my heirs."

"Well, in that case," smiled the prince, "I shall write you a check. What's your name?"

Titles.

SEVERAL diplomats were talking together at a recent dinner when one of the more recently arrived members of the corps became plaintive about the American manner of addressing ministers. "I really can't see why the United States has to follow the British example and reserve the title of 'His Excellency' to ambassadors. The French who are the most polite people on earth address all chiefs of mission by the title of 'Excellency.' We ministers really ought to do something about it."

The Minister of Albania, Faik Konitza, was a member of the group and after several of his colleagues had warmly come to the defense of the previous theory, he began gravely:

"I have another suggestion to make with regard to the method of addressing us here in the United States. Instead of calling us by the same title which is reserved for ambassadors, let us call ourselves by a new and an original title."

There was a chorus of interrogation from the others. "Well, what title would you use?"

The minister replied with his most scholarly air:

"I think we should call ourselves instead of 'His Excellency,' the more modern title of 'His Importance!' Thus the Minister of Ruritania when entering the drawing room of the Secretary of State after the French Ambassador would be announced by the butler as 'His Importance, the Minister from Ruritania.'"

At first there was some silence around the group as one or two of the diplomats suspected the seriousness of the Albanian Minister. But he went gravely on:

"Thus when the two ministers were invited to the same soiree, they could be announced as 'Their Importances' and all the protocols would be satisfied."

Tardy Treasurer.

F. K. BEWLEY, the assistant secretary of the British treasury, who has just been appointed here as financial counselor, is known as "the man who missed the moratorium." When the preliminary negotiations on the Hoover debt delay were going on here, Sir Ronald Lindsay hastily cabled the British Treasury for a technical advisor. Mr. Bewley sailed on the first boat and arrived in New York, the day the moratorium was accepted by the European governments, France alone holding back.

The danger appeared to have been passed and so the British Embassy decided that there was no further need for Mr. Bewley's services. He had remained in New York without even coming to Washington, and was able to catch the same boat back after remaining here only three days. While he was on the ocean, the full force of the moratorium negotiations broke out again in the international negotiations for the standstill agreement. The British Embassy tried getting in touch with their transoceanic financial advisor by radio, but the results were unsatisfactory. The financial counselor returned to the treasury without giving counsel.

Several other missions have financial counselors, the French having a former inspector of finances, Emmanuel Monnick, the Japanese Juichi Tsushima, the Belgians, Jean Cattier, and the Roumanians, George Boncesco and his assistant Emmanuel H. Dimitriu.

Two distinguished names that have flamed across the pages of German history now appear in the list of the German diplomatic service. Herbert von Bismarck, grand nephew of the Iron Chancellor, is making his career in the foreign service of Germany now. Only a short time ago, former Premier Herriot was worried because a Herr von Bulow was named to the staff of the Wilhelmstrasse.

FAITH

By EDGAR A. GUEST

What can help a man who sees
Only stripped and leafless trees;
Looks his garden patch around,
Where the tulips once were found,
And finds only barren ground?

What can hold man winter long
Who has heard the throstle's song.
Loved it and, goes wandering where
Silver music filled the air,
Finding only silence there?

What can comfort man who keeps
Vigil where his fancy sleeps,
When the wind and cruel frost
And each solemn shadow tossed
Cry to him that all is lost?

Faith alone against such pain
Has the power to sustain;
Faith that time shall bring the spring
And the thrushes back to sing,
And make fair each ugly thing.

ANNIVERSARY NEAR FOR JEWISH CENTER

Varied Activities of Institution Will Be Portrayed to Public Wednesday.

The Jewish Community Center will observe the seventh anniversary of the opening of its building Wednesday with a program portraying the various activities of the institution. In conjunction with the anniversary a new service organization has been organized for the purpose of a membership round-up.

During the last year the Jewish Community Center has given 450 free memberships to unemployed young men and women who were formerly connected with the institution. One of the purposes of the round-up is to provide the continuation of this service to the unemployed.

The Jewish Community Center was founded in 1925, when the late Calvin Coolidge, then President of the United States, laid the corner stone. The doors were formally opened on February 22, 1926, by Mrs. Harry Viner. The institution now provides educational, social and physical training programs for more than 26,000 people per month.

Afternoon Exhibition.

As part of the anniversary exercises the various departments of the institution will present a series of exhibitions, starting at 2 o'clock in the afternoon with a program by the children's school of dancing and expression, toy symphony, junior symphony orchestra and a dramatic presentation. In the evening there will be basket ball games, a swimming meet and a simultaneous chess exhibition by G. S. Bishop.

It has been through the national forum of the center that some of the outstanding figures in the world's field of letters have been brought to Washington, among others being Will Durant, Bertrand Russell, Sherwood Anderson, Lion Feuchtwanger, Oswald Garrison Villard and Maurice Schwartz.

Round-Up to Be Described.

All facilities of the institution will be open to the public on Wednesday for the purpose of viewing the various activities.

Tomorrow evening the center service organization will hold a meeting at which time details of the membership round-up will be offered the workers. A program of entertainment has been provided through the courtesy of the Russian Troika, which will present Mischa Markoff, Russian Gypsy barytone and guitarist; Elsa Lang, soprano, and Ralph Chigrinsky, Russian violinist.

The round-up is under the supervision of a ways and means committee consisting of the following: Moe Offenberg, Mrs. Charles Rosenthal, Mrs. Morris Gewirz, David Wiener, Edward Rosenblum, Morris Eanet, Miss Lena Hyatt, Al Goldstein, Abe Shefferman, Joseph Stein and Harry Lebowitz.

MOLECULE MOVIES FOR FAIR VISITORS

Science to Magnify World Which Is Invisible to Naked Eye.

Chicago, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Brobdingnag, the land Gulliver found, where men were as tall as church steeples, will have a biological counterpart in Chicago this summer by magnifying Lilliputia.

A room in Century of Progress' Hall of Science will fulfill those nightmares wherein fantastic creatures, ugly, misshapen, and with teeth like piano keyboards, lumber after you.

Dr. Jay Pearson, in charge of biological exhibits at the World's Fair, which opens June 1, today announced completion of arrangements for staging movies, many times magnified, of the protozoa, invisible single-celled animals that live all about us but of which few are aware.

Impresario of the performances will be Dr. George Roemmert, onetime student of the famous German biologist, Richard Hertwig, and now a resident of New York.

Dr. Roemmert has perfected a method for projecting on a screen or wall these tiny forms of life that pulse in a drop of water from a flower vase, a stagnant pond, or the scrapings from a green-coated stone.

Take an imaginary walk through the "protozoaquarium," the chamber of horrors and wonders as explained by Dr. Pearson.

On four walls in the room, the micrometropolises that are drops of water and grains of dirt appear a thousand times enlarged, their residents unwitting actors, eating, swimming and killing.

Like fish in an aquarium, grotesque, multiformed creatures move on the screens. They range from the simplest unicellular kinds through cell colonies up to small crustaceans, minute cousins of the dinner table lobster.

The spectators get a clear conception of the cell, unit of all living matter, by seeing it as an entity, realizes how nature carries her blending of colors and working of designs to fractions, wielding brushes and trowels infinitesimal in size.

"Only Game Fish Swim Upstream"

By GEORGE D. RILEY

FACING destruction of the gamest fish in American waters, the black bass, sportsmen throughout the country are calling on senators to restore to the appropriation bill the small sum that assures Federal protection of the black bas.

"Alarm has been sounded among anglers as the supply of these fishes has decreased," declared Dr. Lewis Radcliffe, deputy U. S. Commissioner of Fisheries. "One of the most effective measures for their protection has been the passage of legislation, making it illegal to take black bass commercially or to offer them for sale, regardless of whether the fish were caught within or without the State.

"Twenty-seven States and the District of Columbia are on this honor roll. Fourteen States prohibit sale of black bass taken within their own borders, but not fish caught outside the individual States."

Licenses issued in 1929-30 in Virginia netted $259,303.55 from 148,790 resident and 2,693 nonresident hunters and fishermen. Maryland collected $140,004.55 from 71,576 resident and 1,979 nonresident hunters and fishermen the same season, Talbott Denmead Fisheries reports.

A measure affecting black bass will be introduced in the Florida Legislature, convening in April.

Safety zones for wild life, as well as humans, is necessary for its protection, and now is the time to establish them while so much wood-cutting is going on in the rural districts, says the American Game Association. Piled brush and treetops will establish safety zones, say officials of the Iowa Fish and Game Department, who have worked out an ideal method.

One may establish a safety zone and shelter for game and song birds by simply piling the waste brush, not haphazardly, but with careful consideration of the feeding habits of quail, pheasant or other birds that inhabit the farm, Iowa's game management experts point out.

Since the Washington Chapter, I. W. L. A., has decided it wishes to have no "sick" committees on its list, it has been decided to rename the former sick committee, to be known hereafter as the welfare committee.

IN view of the interest now being shown in legislation to remove the black bass from the markets, attention is called to a statement contained in a report of the Commissioners of Fisheries of Maryland, published in 1876: "Introduced into the Potomac River from the Youghiogheny, and now abounds in some of the upper parts of that stream, likewise in the Chesapeake & Ohio Canal, and has become naturalized in Lake Roland, near Baltimore. It is greatly esteemed by the inhabitants of Montgomery, Frederick and Washington Counties who travel many miles to obtain a supply of it."

Plants of large-mouth bass were made in the Potomac below Washington about 1890; by 1896 the fish had become remarkably abundant in the vicinity of Washington. In the winter of 1898-99 many thousand pounds were caught in Mattawoman, Occoquan and Piscataway Creeks, a single shipment of one fisherman amounting to 1,700 pounds.

There's nothing like proving what you say to be more than convincing. Wes Huntress, Airways, the man who killed an 11-point buck while aiming at a rabbit. Here is the picture of Huntress, the hunter, and the buck that horned into the line of fire and subsequently into the picture. Place, Maine woods.

If we will provide reasonable protection and stop the commercialization of bass, the Potomac River can easily be made the finest black bass stream on the Atlantic Coast.

Deputy Commissioner, U. S. Fisheries Bureau.

WHILE we do not condone propagation and stocking of the so-called cat course fish, such as the catfish and carp, because of their fondness for the spawn of game fishes, particularly the bass, yet since they are prolific and abound in waters conveniently reached, let us take advantage of the sport to be had in catching them.

During the long, irksome period waiting for bass and trout season to open, not to mention salt-water gamesters, great fun can be had by catching large catfish or even the lowly carp, using light tackle. They are by no means devoid of action, as many local anglers can tell you.

Catfish, especially those of the fasters waters of the nearby Potomac, are fine eating, if properly prepared, not the method involving the oak plank—whereby the fish is scraped off and the "plank" eaten. That applies to carp only.

Although they set out to hunt ducks on the Island of Nanjemoy, Bernard Flinn, James Carr and Harvey Dent, disbursing office, Interstate Commerce Commission, must have resolved their trip into a fishing journey, judging by the fishy stories they brought back and the lack of ducks they displayed, their friends say.

Ten More Photos Published Today in Search for Queen

Forty of the 100 Entrants Who Will Be So Honored Now Have Been Pictured in Rotogravure Section, Each Receiving $5 Award.

The pictures of ten charming entrants in The Washington Post's contest for the selection of fifty-one girls to be the queen and court of honor at the opening of the Chicago World's Fair on June 1 are shown in the rotogravure section of today's Post making a total of forty young women who have been similarly honored. In all, 100 girls will be pictured up to and including April 2, and The Washington Post will award $5 for these pictures, in addition to grand prizes of $10,000 in cash, which will be distributed after the close of the contest, April 15.

Selection of photographs for publication has no bearing upon the final judgment in the contest. Although photographs may be submitted at any time up to midnight, April 15, prompt entrance is advisable to increase the opportunity to secure $5 in payment for the privilege of reproduction.

The fifty-one girls who will be finally selected from among those entered in the contest will receive a glorious two weeks of entertainment in Chicago as the guests of The Washington Post and the Chicago Tribune. Their transportation will be provided from their homes in any part of the world, and return, and every other expense, including hotel accomodations and the cost of beautiful apparel, will be paid in full by these newspapers.

A queen and her first and second ladies-in-waiting, to officiate at the opening ceremonies of the Century of Progress International Exposition, will be chosen from this group to receive cash rewards of $5,000, $3,000 and $2,000, respectively. The other 48 girls will form the queen's court of honor and will share equally in the international recognition that will be given "the world's most charming girls."

Every unmarried girl is invited to enter this contest by submitting her photograph to the "Queen Contest Editor, The Washington Post," or pictures may be entered by any friend or relative of a girl. Photographs must be at least 6x8 inches in size and made within the past twelve months. The transmittal coupon, printed on this page today, should be pasted to the back of the photograph or the same information written upon a sheet of paper will do.

Only professionals, such as stage girls and artists' models and employes of The Washington Post or members of their families, are barred from competition. There are no entrance fees nor other costs or obligations. This contest is sponsored by The Washington Post and Chicago Tribune by exclusive arrangement with the Century of Progress International Exposition.

PARAGUAY STUDIES WAR DECLARATION

Formal Decree Might Help Blockade of Bolivia, Is View of Asuncion.

Asuncion, Paraguay, Feb. 18 (A.P.). The Paraguayan government is preparing a formal declaration of war against Bolivia, foe of Paraguay in months-long warfare in the Gran Chaco border area, it was learned tonight.

The Senate will meet in an extraordinary session next week to consider a resolution asking the formal declaration, semiofficial sources said.

The pending declaration, after eight months of hostilities in the Gran Chaco, apparently will be motivated by the belief that the actual state of war will facilitate a blockade of Bolivian frontiers.

Argentina, Chile and, perhaps, Peru and Brazil are said to be contemplating a move to blockade the Bolivian frontier in order to force the cessation of hostilities.

Bolivia has said semiofficially that it would regard any blockade as a violation of the 1904 treaty under which Chile made Arica an open port served by the La Paz Railway, which Chile built as a concession to coastless Bolivia.

The Bolivian government has intimated its belief that the blockade would violate the treaty would add to the hostilities and would reopen the entire Tacna-Arica controversy, with Bolivia as the interested party.

Public Is Invited to Play In Multiple Chess Game

The Jewish Community Center, which has been actively engaged in promoting chess events for two months, will stage a simultaneous exhibition in connection with the celebration of the seventh anniversary of its founding on February 22. The exhibition will be conducted by G. E. Bishop, president of the District of Columbia Chess League.

The center has declared "open house" for the evening in question and the general public is invited to attend and fill the role either of contestant against Mr. Bishop or spectator. Those desiring to participate are requested to bring their own boards and chessmen for it is expected the center's facilities will be taxed to the utmost. There will be no fees.

Insured Husband Ends Life With Car Fumes

York, Me., Feb. 18 (U.P.).—With a hose leading from the exhaust pipe into the closed automobile in which he was sitting, the body of Walter C. Youngquist, 29, of Manchester, N. H., assistant purchasing agent for the Public Service Co. of New Hampshire, was found on a back road near here today.

A note addressed to his wife said "I had better go now while the insurance still is good."

Massie Attack Suspect Facing 10-Year Term

Honolulu, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Henry Chang, Chinese, one of five men accused of having attacked Mrs. Thomas H. Massie, must serve nine years and eleven months imprisonment for violation of parole in another criminal assault case in 1929.

Client of Darrow Again Given Death

Youth Who Killed Street Car Conductor Faces Chair Third Time.

Rockford, Ill., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—For the third time Russell McWilliams, 18, was sentenced today to be executed for the murder of a street car conductor.

A boy of 16 when he shot to death William Sayles after robbing him in August, 1931, young McWilliams twice had been saved from imminent death in the electric chair by supreme court reprieves.

Judge Arthur E. Fisher had imposed the death penalty twice upon the youth's pleas of guilty. Today Judge Edward D. Shurtleff, who had been given jurisdiction by a change of venue ordered by the supreme court, determined on death for the defendant despite the earnest pleas of the veteran defender, Clarence Darrow, who blamed circumstances, environment, society and liquor for the crime of a boy in his teens.

Once Milwaukee Treasurer Jailed

Drew and Former Banker Indicted in Fraud of $500,000.

Milwaukee, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—John I. Drew, for 16 years city treasurer, lay in a hospital today under police guard while the district attorney started prosecution of charges that he embezzled $500,000 while he handled the city's money. Drew, a nonpartisan candidate, was defeated for relection by a socialist, John W. Mudroch, last year.

Drew and U. J. Rosenberg, formerly president of the closed Liberty State Bank, were indicted at an extraordinary session of a county grand jury.

Police aroused Drew at St. Joseph's hospital where he lay seriously ill with a heart affliction and he passed the rest of the night at the county jail with physicians in attendance.

Legislative Group To Visit Ruth Judd

Spokesman Says Method Is Sought to Save Life of "Tigress."

Phoenix, Ariz., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Representative G. L. Christian, of Maricopa County, said today he would head a group of Arizona legislators going to the State Penitentiary at Florence tomorrow to see Winnie Ruth Judd, under sentence to hang for murder of Agnes Anne Leroi in the double trunk murder cases.

"We are going down to see her in an effort to formulate some means whereby we can have her sentence commuted," Christian said. It was not known how many legislators would make the trip.

Mrs. Judd recently applied to the State Board of Pardons and Paroles for a commutation of her sentence. Her execution is set for April 14.

Suicide Club

Self-Slain Man Requests Congress to Start One for Hopeless.

Los Angeles, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—August S. Seymore, 60, today drifted into a death sleep of his own choosing after leaving a note addressed to Congress urging creation of a suicide society by national legislation.

The note asked Congress to appoint a board of physicians empowered to "end the lives of aged persons suffering from incurable illnesses and misery." The plan for the suicide society, as the Seymore note set forth, was capitalization of a national organization for $100,000,000 and the erection of a 100-story hotel where people suffering from illness could be taken for treatment.

In the event that such treatment disclosed there was no hope of being cured, he suggested, the member would be presented with the alternative of three different modes in which to end his life. These were suggested as a "pink pill" bringing instant death, placement under a "death ray," or inhalation of "laughing gas."

REICH LEADER QUITS AFTER HITLER ORDER

District President Refuses to Execute Edict to Ban Catholic Papers.

Muenster, Germany, Feb. 18 (A.P.). Rather than execute orders of the Hitler government to suppress Catholic newspapers, Provincial President Gronowsky, of the Muenster District, handed in his resignation today. Herr Gronowsky had asked Hermann Goering, minister without portfolio, to raise the ban against the organs of the Catholic Center Party, but Minister of Interior Wilhelm Frick refused.

The newspaper Germania, leading organ of the Catholic Center Party, was suspended today for a three-day period because it printed an appeal to Catholic organizations "to fight bolshevism whether from the left or right."

The Deutsche Allgemeine Zeitung, an industrialist paper, said this action would be followed by suspension of all the 300 dailies in the centrist press.

In addition to the ban on the Germania, dozens of centrist papers were suspended throughout the Catholic Rhineland today. Socialist and communist publications in Giessen, Nuremberg, Heidelberg, Rastatt, Pforzheim and Constance were suspended for periods up to four weeks.

League to Consider Colombian Appeal

Council Will Act Monday on Leticia Under Article 15.

Geneva, Switzerland, Feb. 18 (A.P.). The League of Nations committee considering the dispute between Colombia and Peru over the Leticia border territory drafted plans tonight for an extraordinary session of the League Council Monday, when, in response to Colombia's appeal, the conflict will be dealt with under article 15 of the League covenant.

Since the fighting has occurred on Colombian territory, the council is expected to direct its warnings toward Peru, whose attitude already has been sharply criticized. Experience in the Sino-Japanese dispute will enable the concil to proceed with greater expedition, as some important precedents now have been laid down.

While there is talk in some quarters of sending a commission of inquiry to the Leticia territory, members of the committee tend to the opinion that this will not be necessary as the basic facts are not disputed.

Y., and a sister, Mrs. Newbold Noyes, McLean, Va.; and $400,000 to another brother, Baird Ewing, Yonkers, and $25,000 to Albert L. Waldron, of Cleveland, a friend.

Depression Helps Book Circulation

Col. Bliss Says Many Turn to Reading to Forget Personal Worry.

A 37 per cent increase in book circulation was revealed in a statement of the American Library Association report of a survey of 33 cities, Col. Edward Goring Bliss, director of the Washington Chamber of Commerce, said in a radio broadcast over WMAL yesterday.

This increase during the depression years over normal circulation, Col. Bliss attributed to the desire to forget personal problems through recreational reading. He stressed the need for libraries and additional books.

Among the books which are most in demand are educational volumes of all types.

Westminster Heir Hurt in Crash.

Titusville, Fla., Feb. 18 (U.P.).—Capt. R. E. Grosvenor, in line for the title of Duke of Westminster, was injured in an auto accident near here today. He was returning from Palm Beach where he had visited the Duke of Sutherland. He received a few cuts in the crash and his car was wrecked.

Garnishment Suit Won by Comstock

Court Refuses to Allow Pay of Michigan's Governor to Be Seized.

Flint, Mich., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—A garnishment suit which had held up Gov. Comstock's salary was dismissed in circuit court here today by Judge Paul V. Gadola.

The court agreed with contentions of Attorney General Patrick J. O'Brien that the Legislature of Michigan never intended that the salary of an executive officer should be garnisheed. He said also that if the writ were allowed to stand it could not be collected.

Before his nomination on the Democratic ticket last fall Mr. Comstock stated frankly that, while once wealthy, he had lost his fortune and was unable to meet his obligations.

Sharpe Talks on Radio Of Electrical Progress

The electrical industry in Washington was described last night in a radio address by C. Melvin Sharpe, executive assistant to the president of the Potomac Electric Power Co., sponsored by the Washington Chamber of Commerce.

Mute Cripple in 2-Day S O S as Mother Dies

Mount Holly, N. J., Feb. 18 (A.P.). For two days Joseph Carney, helplessly crippled and unable to speak, sat at the window of his home vainly trying to attract passersby—his mother was dead upstairs and he needed aid.

Not until today did any one come. Ralph Eshelman, driver of a bread wagon, heard Carney tapping on the window glass. Eshelman broke in the door and learned, through notes, that Mrs. Catherine Carney, 69, had died Thursday.

Baltimore Architect Marries.

Baltimore, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—D. K. Este Fisher, jr., Baltimore architect, and Mrs. Samuel Small, widow of Samuel Small, of York, Pa., were married quietly at noon today at the Protestant Episcopal Church of the Redeemer.

Battles on Roads Mark Milk Strike

Pickets and Farmers Use Fists Freely; Cheese Plants Close.

New London, Wis., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Thousands of pounds of milk splashed on highways of Winnebago and Waupaca Counties and fists flew today as large groups of farmers participated in a milk sales strike.

Tempers of hundreds of highway pickets grew more surly and farmers trying to smuggle milk to market received rough treatment.

The strike increased in effectiveness, leaders said, and became general over Dodge County, where it was estimated that half of the county's 300 cheese factories, condenseries, creameries and receiving stations had been closed.

WARNING IS ISSUED ON FUND REQUEST

Grayson Announces All Plans for Inaugural Keeping Smooth Schedule.

Satisfactory progress in all of the manifold tasks incident to the Roosevelt inaugural preparations was reported yesterday at a meeting of the inaugural committee chairmen, held in the Washington Building. Without exception the reports made to Admiral Cary T. Grayson showed the committees to be well within or ahead of schedule in making their arrangements for the several hundred thousand visitors who are expected in Washington within the next ten days or two weeks.

All of the grandstands now in the course of erection will be completed by February 28, according to Waddy B. Wood, and decorations will be put in place not later than March 2. Ticket sale, it was stated, already has severely reduced the available seats in several classifications. Reproductions of the inaugural medal will begin reaching Washington next week, Robert W. Woolley, chairman of the committee on medals, reported, and arrangements have been made with all the hotels to take orders for this work of art.

Mrs. Blair Banister, chairman of the committee on housing, told the meeting that 15,000 rooms already had been listed. Arrangements have been made to connect her headquarters with the A. A. A. information booths and the similar booths at the Union Station during the inaugural period, so that visitors may be sent directly to the accommodations provided for them.

Parking Space Donated.

Thomas P. Littlepage, chairman of the committee on transportation, reported that the Washington Baseball Club had donated its parking space for the accommodation of buses arriving from the Northeast and West.

Maj. Ernest W. Brown, superintendent of police, reported on the protective measures which are being made incident to the inaugural.

The establishment of ten first-aid stations with motorized ambulance, physicians and nurses at each, was announced yesterday by Maj. Gen. Merritte W. Ireland, chairman of the committee on medical aid. These emergency quarters will be spaced from the Capitol to Nineteenth street and Pennsylvania avenue, so that speedy first-aid treatment may be given to either marchers or spectators with the least possible delay.

Committee Meets Tuesday.

Forrest Rutherford, vice chairman of the general entertainment committee, announced yesterday that the Cities Service Co. had donated the half hour which it usually occupies on the National Broadcasting Co. network Friday night to permit of the inaugural concert broadcast March 3.

Invitations have been received by the general entertainment committee from the Newcomers Club, which meets at the Carlton Hotel and the Civitan Club, which has Tuesday luncheons at the Hamilton, to have representatives of the committe discuss the inaugural program.

A meeting of the general inaugural committee will be held in the Willard room of the Willard Hotel Tuesday noon. Thursday afternoon at 4 o'clock the committee of distinguished guests, of which Ray Baker is chairman, will meet at the same place.

Warning Is Issued.

Warning was issued yesterday by Admiral Grayson that the inaugural committee has no connection with the Roosevelt testimonial committee, for which contributions have been solicited in Washington. According to reports, individuals representing themselves as members of the Roosevelt testimonial committee have been calling prominent citizens on the telephone, and on obtaining contributions have sent messengers for the money.

The only money sought by the Roosevelt inaugural committee, it was stated at inaugural headquarters in the Washington Building, has been for the guarantee fund.

Union Has Credentials.

However, the following statement was issued last night by the Roosevelt inaugural committee:

"The warning issued today by the Roosevelt inaugural committee was aimed at solicitors who represented that they were acting for the Roosevelt inaugural committee in soliciting funds for a Roosevelt testimonial.

"It was not intended to hamper the movement of the Central Labor Union in preparing their testimonial to President-elect Franklin Delano Roosevelt. The authorized representatives of the Central Labor Union carry credentials."

The intervention of James Roosevelt, son of President-elect Franklin D. Roosevelt, yesterday permitted a belated entry in the Roosevelt inaugural parade. Some weeks ago the oldest son of the President-elect promised Charles S. Murphy of Worcester, Mass., that he would be given a place in the parade for his four-hitch donkey team.

Notified of Obligation.

The inaugural parade committee was notified of this obligation yesterday, and found a place for the Massachusetts man in the line of march. The desire of the Tammany delegation for an Indian band to march with the New York Society in the parade has been met, it was announced, by placing the Standing Rock (N. Dak.) Reservation Drum and Bugle Corps at the head of the Fourth Division. This musical organization is composed entirely of full-blood Sioux Indians, who will appear in full regalia.

Acceptance of the invitation which Ray Baker, chairman of the committee on distinguished guests, extended to F. A. Bishop of Retsil, Wash., oldest wearer of the Congressional Medal of Honor, to attend the inauguration ceremonies, was received. In a postal card addressed to Mr. Baker, Mrs. Bishop, wife of the veteran, said: "Mr. Bishop has been sick for several days, but is doing fine and we have decided to accept the invitation you have so kindly sent him and thank you many times for all your trouble. We plan on arriving in Washington, D. C., Thursday morning, March 2, but will drop a card later on."

Socialists to Hear Amlie Tonight.

Representative Thomas Amlie (Progressive Republican), of Wisconsin, will be speaker at the Sunday Evening Forum of the Socialist Party of the District of Columbia at its meeting tonight at the District Socialist headquarters, 212 H street northwest. Representative Amlie will speak on "The Social Lag in Politics."

Exposed Sugar Trust and Knows Tariff and Taxes by Heart.

By J. BERNARD McDONNELL.

A brilliant legislative career, which has colored not only the history of the Democratic party, but the pages of national and international history as well, will be brought to a climax in the Seventy-third Congress if Representative Henry T. Rainey, of Illinois, is elected Speaker of the next House of Representatives.

Of good height and broad of person and mind, Representative Rainey is one of the picturesque figures in the House. A halo of white hair surmounts a head which might aptly be described as leonine if the word did not conjure up a picture of proud and conquering arrogance. He looks like nature lovers would like a lion to look, if a lion knew humans well enough to forgive a few of their weaknesses.

Beneath the shining halo his powerful face is calm, benignant. His voice is soft and quiet. His manner is unassuming. His dress is simple and is distinguished by a flowing black silk bow tie. With unassuming courtliness he addresses his young and pretty secretary as "Miss Margaret."

Rise No Accident.

There is about this Illinois farmer-lawyer, who is able to write several degrees behind his name, something of the calm certainty of time personified. The mills of the gods may grind slowly, but they grind exceedingly fine, and day in and day out he tries to help the grinding along.

Twice Henry Rainey has won his way to the front ranks of his party in the House. Today he is the floor leader of the Democrats, who were given control of the House in the elections of two years ago by a margin of six votes. If he isn't elected Speaker he will be chairman of the powerful Ways and Means Committee, of which he is the ranking member next to Representative James W. Collier, of Mississippi, who is going to retire at the end of this session.

Indicative of the ability and reputation of the man, perhaps, is the fact that friends of some of the other candidates for Speaker urge that his knowledge of taxation, of tariff and of other matters with which the committee has to deal, is so extensive the party must not elect him Speaker, because if it did it would lose his services as chairman of the committee. His supporters agree about the estimation of his ability, but suggest that if he is such a good man to the party he can serve it better as Speaker than he can as chairman of a committee.

Stickler for Seniority.

If he is elected Speaker there will be a new deal in the historic Democratic organization of the House. He favors maintenance of the seniority rule and will fight to maintain that rule, but he recognizes that the rule does not always advance to commanding positions men who may have broad views of the needs of the Nation as a whole. It is something of a saying among veterans in the House that when one forgets he is primarily a representative of the folk back in Squeedunk County, in Kansaloosa, and becomes a statesman, he is marking the end of his congressional career.

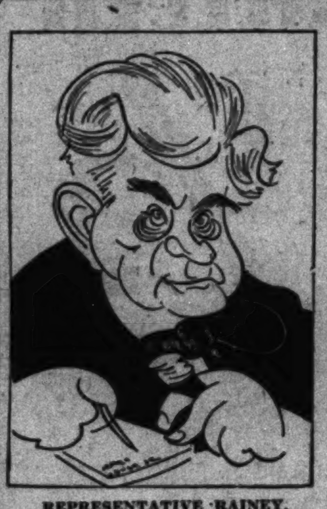
Representative Rainey proposes, if elected Speaker, to create a party steering committee which shall be elected by the party caucus regardless of the length of their service in the House. No two members of the steering committee would be from the same State. The various State delegations and the members from the various parts of the country would get together and name their candidates. This steering committee would consider and determine the party's legislative program. Mr. Rainey believes that the days when the Speaker of the House was an all-powerful czar are properly ended.

Only one man, Representative Edward W. Pou (Democrat), of North Carolina, will outrank the Illinoisan in length of service in the House when it convenes in its next session, which will mark Mr. Rainey's fifteenth term.

Graduate of Amherst.

Born on a farm in 1860, Mr. Rainey was graduated from Amherst College in 1883 and afterward from the law department of Northwestern University in 1885 and later went back to Amherst to do some more studying. Since then he has been decorated with various honorary degrees by several colleges and universities. In the meantime he had gone back to Carrollton, Ill., and there had begun the practice of law in 1886.

His folks had been in Illinois since 1804, when his Grandfather Thomas came over from Kentucky. Grandfather Thomas, incidentally, served in the War of 1812. The Rainey branch of the family settled in Illinois in 1830, and Grandfather Rainey, too, came from Kentucky. Grandfather Rainey must have been a man of parts. He was a major in the Mexican War and then he went South, searching for further adventure, and for several years he was an officer in one or another South American army. When he came back home he wooed and won a Kentucky belle and married her in Lexington, Ky. She was a cousin of Henry Clay, a member of the famous Bourbon County, Ky., Clay family. He took her back to Illinois, where they raised their family.



REPRESENTATIVE RAINEY.

It was during Henry Rainey's college days that he met his future bride. When he had done with school and she had completed her postgraduate course in sociology and other subjects, they were married and he took her to Carrollton. He must have been a good lawyer because his services were demanded throughout the State and beyond it. He worked as hard then as he does now. He could afford to. Blessed with a good physique that made him a champion heavyweight boxer in his college days and enabled him to pound down the cinder path at the rate of 100 yards in 10¼ seconds, he put the same ardor into his work.

Then He Bought Farm.

The fees from his law practice went into two things. One was the gratification of his boyhood ambition—purchase of a farm—and the other was indulging his wife in her passion for helping others less fortunate. So it was that when he came back home after a big case he brought his Ella a book for her boys' club.

When Henry Rainey ran as a Democrat in his theretofore Republican district it was something akin to heresy. But he was elected to the Fifty-eighth Congress and assumed office in 1903, and was reelected regularly until the Harding landslide. He was defeated that year, although he ran thousands of votes ahead of his ticket. Two years later he was back again and has remained in Congress ever since.

The power and force of unswerving honesty and frankness of the Illinoisan had won him Nation-wide recognition before the Harding regime. When he was defeated he was about to be made chairman of the Ways and Means Committee. When he came back he started all over at the bottom of the ladder and again has won his way to the top in his party's affairs in the House.

Showed Up High Tariff.

A cursory recital of the historic battles fought by Representative Rainey include many of the most sensational episodes in the history of the Nation in the last quarter of a century. It was he who dealt the death blow to the Republican tenure of power by his effective attack on the Payne-Aldrich tariff law. He got 40 American watches from an importer. The importer had bought these American watches abroad and sold them in this country cheaper than he could buy them direct from the makers in this country. There was a furore. The same facts were disclosed about products of the powerful United States Steel Corporation, which, under protection of the Payne--Aldrich tariff, sold their products abroad cheaper than in this country. Sewing machines and other commodities were exposed. The Republican sponsors of the tariff law were beaten.

Representative Rainey launched the fight against the power companies which has culminated in a national issue. Authority to utilize power sites had been granted various companies by Congress by means of bills on which there was no debate. Mr. Rainey made it a practice to be on the floor when such bills were brought up for passage by unanimous consent and he objected to each and every one. That was the end of that chapter of the power site development.

Won Over Wilson.

When President Woodrow Wilson assumed office he called Mr. Rainey to the White House and said considerable capital was ready to go into the development of these sites, but Mr. Rainey was blocking the developments. Asked by the President what he intended to do about it, the Illinoisan said he would continue to do so. An outgrowth of that conference was the appointment by President Wilson of Mr. Rainey, Secretary of the Interior Franklin D. Lane and Gifford Pinchot to draft a Federal water power law. They drafted a law, and although it was not enacted as they drafted it, their proposal was the basis of the present law and its enactment marked a new departure in national policy.

One of his most spectacular fights was over the so-called revolution of Panama and the quick recognition by President Theodore Roosevelt of its independence of Colombia, despite the treaty between Colombia and the United States to safeguard the integrity of Colombian territory. It was years after that before the United States would agree to consider any proposal by Colombia that it had been damaged when the United States prevented Colombia landing troops in Panama to put down the opera bouffe revolution. Indicative of the man is a statement he made before the House Foreign Relations Committee, then considering his resolution to give Colombia a chance to have its grievance considered. He said:

"My position is this: That even if in doing something that may prove of great commercial advantage to this country we committed a wrong on a little republic that can not resist us except in The Hague tribunal, we ought to go with them to The Hague. They can not resist us by resorting to a clash of armored vessels on the seas and great armies upon the land; can not challenge us as to that sort of arbitration; they can only ask us to settle this in The Hague tribunal, and we can not, in honor, deny this reasonable request."

Won Over Roosevelt.

It was in the hectic days of that historic battle to save a little nation from the might of a stronger, that Mrs. Rainey learned Spanish so she could read and translate the Spanish papers to keep him advised of their comment and the news developments in Colombia and in Panama. The eventual decision of the United States to compensate Colombia for the damage done her had a material effect on the prestige of the United States in international negotiations. The bitter battle also resulted in the election of Representative Rainey as the last member of the Ananias Club of the vociferous Theodore Roosevelt.

The Nation still remembers the sugar tariff and scandals. That was another of the achievements which dot the career of Representative Rainey. He charged on the floor of the House that the American Sugar Refining Co. had bribed various Government employes to falsify the weight of sugar imported into this country, so as to avoid much of the duty. He charged they had stolen $6,000,000 in that manner and named Henry W. Taft, a brother of President William Howard Taft, as the sugar company's attorney. The company subsequently admitted that it owed the Government $3,000,000 in tariff duties it hadn't paid. Mr. Rainey sought to have the officers of the corporation prosecuted. They were not. Sixteen minor checkers and weighers were indicted, found guilty and sent to prison. A few months later they were pardoned by President Taft and Representative Rainey's name was stricken from even the most formal and cold of White House functions, but his battle undoubtedly had a good deal to do with putting the Republican party in bad odor.

G. O. P. Gets Square.

He drafted the United States Tariff Commission law on the invitation of President Wilson after a series of speeches in the House. The President said he had prepared a bipartisan instead of a nonpartisan commission bill. A nonpartisan bill couldn't be passed, Mr. Rainey insisted. All right, go ahead, President Wilson replied, but some day you will be sorry. Subsequently the bill was enacted and the President named Mr. Rainey as one of the Tariff Commissioners. For the first time the Senate refused to confirm a member of the House to an executive appointment. Mr. Rainey was anathema to the Republicans.

Mere recital of the historic battles in which the haloed Democratic leader has engaged would require a book. His ability is unquestioned. It is said that he could be locked in a room by himself and draft a sound tariff bill. He deprecates such talk. The same thing is said about a tax bill. He deprecates that encomium, too. His election as floor leader of the present House was opposed because he was a fiery radical, who would upset the party's applecart. His election as Speaker of the next House is being argued again on the ground that he is a conservative, not in conformity with the ideas of President-elect Roosevelt, although he was the earliest and most stanch advocate of the New York Governor in the entire House membership, and he has been singled out by organizations opposed to the power companies as having the most consistently favorable record, from their viewpoint, of any of the other candidates for Speaker of the next House.

NOTED ORCHESTRAS WILL PLAY MARCH 4

Six Organizations Engaged for Inauguration Ball at Auditorium.

World-renowned dance orchestras will play for the dancing at the Roosevelt-Garner inaugural ball in the Washington Auditorium on the night of March 4, according to the announcement of Mrs. John Allan Dougherty, chairman of the inaugural ball committee, yesterday.

Dancers will sway to the strains of Rudy Vallee's Connecticut Yankees, Guy Lombardo's dance orchestra, Eli Dantzig's Hotel St. George orchestra, alternating with Eddie Duchin, Irving (Happy) Rose and George Gaul. The alternation of six dance orchestras will insure continuous dancing on the two floors of the Auditorium Building from the end of the reception of distinguished visitors until the last dancer has left the building.

George Gaul's orchestra, composed in the main of members of the National Symphony, will play the accompaniment when Miss Ponselle sings "The Star-Spangled Banner," immediately after the reception of the Vice President and Mrs. Garner. The orchestra for this solo will be directed by Julio Serafin, of the Metropolitan Opera Company.

Senate Rejects Loan For Bermuda Air Line

(Associated Press.)

The Senate yesterday struck from the pending relief bill a provision to permit the Government to aid in financing a ten-hour air service between Washington and Bermuda.

The move was made at the instigation of Senator Couzens (Republican), Michigan, though the provision was put in the bill at the request of a Detroit engineer, who said he and associates were prepared to invest $1,000,000 if they could borrow $2,-00,000 from the Government.

THYROID ILLS LAID TO MODERN LIVING

Dr. Palmer, of Columbia, Is Speaker at Banquet of G. W. Society.

COMMITTEE SEEKS MEN'S OLD CLOTHES

Contribution of Garments to Lighten Burden of Regular Relief.

Faced by a constantly increasing demand for men's garments, the Colthes Conservation Committee, located in the old Ford Building at Pennsylvania avenue and John Marshall place, has issued a special appeal for suits, overcoats, underwear, shirts and socks that can be used by unemployed men. Bundles of garments may be left at the libraries, firehouses, or can be given to the laundrymen for delivery to the committee.

Since the organization of the Colthes Conservation Committee last November, more than 10,000 garments have been contributed. Approximately 8,000 articles have been supplied to about 1,000 individuals. These garments are distributed only through requisitions issued by Community Chest agencies.

The committee is operated, to a large extent, by volunteers. It was established at the request of Ernest Daniel, president of the District of Columbia committee on employment, by the District of Columbia Federation of Women's Clubs. Mrs. Harvey W. Wiley, president of the federation, took charge at the opening with only one unemployed man as a helper. As the work increased members of various women's clubs, churches and other groups have been volunteering their time.

At the present itme a group of unemployed people are at work at the committee headquarters cleaning and making over all sorts of garments for men, women and children. Any kind of a garment can be utilized, even if it is past the point where it can be of service in its original state, because there is always a portion of it that can be made over for a child.

Distribution of clothing is helping to relieve the burden on the relief agencies, which have been called on in the past to supply clothing as well as food and shelter to the needy of Washington.

GARNER IS ABSENT FROM RECEPTION

MYSTERY OF ATOM IS LURE TO SCIENCE

Technocrat's Dream of a Giant Might Be Realized.

A barrage, a bombardment, an onslaught, which may bear results of more effect to the destiny of humanity than Waterloo, the utilization of steam, the discovery of electricity, or any political step in the history of the world, is now in progress.

In laboratories the world over this attack is being carried on, as physicists, as never before, seek the secret of the unit of matter—the atom.

With the zeal of medieval alchemists' search for the philosopher's stone to transmute the base metals into gold, modern-day scientists are concentrated on the problem.

They may well be called modern alchemists, and one of the results of their search into the mysteries of matter may be the transmutation of the precious from the cheap, of gold from lead.

Is No Idle Dream.

What the results of such a discovery would be are almost beyond comprehension in the effect on the economic structure of the world. Such is no idle dream. Already one element has been changed into another in the laboratory. Lithium atoms have been transmuted to those of helium. Gold and platinum may be but further steps along the path of search.

This attempt to knock the ultimate truth from the atom is in every sense a bombardment, and for his aid the scientist is mustering a greater concentration of energy each day.

His tools are radium, which produces the greatest concentrated power known, and higher voltages of electricity than have ever been developed before. At the laboratory of the Carnegie Institution of Washington, 5,000,000 volts are harnessed as guns to turn against the atom. More and more power is being sought. At the Massachusetts Institute of Technology apparatus which, it is hoped, will produce 10,000,000 volts is being constructed.

Second Possible Result.

A second possible result of the finding of the atom's secret might mean the realization of the technocrat's dream—for in terms of energy the atom is a giant. Scientists say that the atomical energy in a droplet of water would drive the greatest of ocean liners from New York to Europe.

With a way to release and to utilize this energy—man would have at his hand a servant to replace steam and water-generated electricity. Power would be king and around it would have to be built a new social and political economy.

This shelling of the atom is on a small "front." The atom is inconceivably small, having a diameter of a hundredth-millionth of an inch. Every atom has a similar structure, being built up of positive and negative electricity, in particles called proton and electrons.

Was Central Nucleus.

According to the latest theories of the nature of matter, these fundamental particles are "wave-packets" and matter, accordingly, wave motion.

Each atom has a central positive charged nucleus which is surrounded by an atmosphere of electrons. The number and position of the electrons determine the kind of an atom it is, whether lead, or gold, or radium, or oxygen.

To gain a conception of the size of the atom and its parts, dimensions must be abandoned and analogies resorted to.

Scientists have amused themselves by suggesting such analogies. For example, they say that if a drop of water were magnified to the size of the earth the constituent atoms would be the size of footballs.

Astounding in Itself.

Or again, if the atoms in a tumbler of water were mixed with all the water in the world and the tumbler again filled, it would contain 2,000 of the original atoms.

That a structure so infinitessimally small could be worked with is astounding in itself. Instruments have been devised and method evolved by means of which atoms can be disrupted into their constituent parts. Thus conclusions are reached about the nature, composition and behavior of a thing which is far too tiny to ever be seen.

In the Department of Terrestrial Magnetism of the Carnegie Institution here, the onslaught on the atom is as vigorous as in any other laboratory of the world. The attack is carried under direction of Drs. M. A. Tuve, L. R. Hafstad and O. Dahl.

High Speed Rays.

Apparatus devised by them produce the highest voltages ever gained, and they have been able to produce the high speed rays from these voltages which smash the atom.

They also have achieved transmutation, having disintegrated lithium and boron into helium with the rays produced by the high potential electricity.

In Washington, in Boston, in Lord Rutherford's laboratory in Cambridge England, in French and German laboratories, the search goes on, with scientific men anticipating great discoveries, which may tremble the world.

Laugh Club

Grand Order of Chucklers Forms at Clarksburg to Chase Slump.

Special to The Washington Post.

Clarksburg, W. Va., Feb. 18.—West Virginia business and professional men are convinced the depression is leaving and they have organized to speed it along by laughing it off.

To this end they have organized the Grand Order of Chucklers, which has been duly incorporated under West Virginia laws. Now, for a dollar a year membership, the people can chuckle and make faces at the depression in an organized and presumably more effective way.

A. A. Lilly, former State's attorney general, former candidate for governor, now practicing law in Charleston, heads the organization. His title is Big Chuck.

The Chucklers pledge themselves on joining to use their "best efforts in promoting courtesy, humor, fun, tolerance and a better feeling among men."

The plan of the new organization is to form a local chapter in each county of the State with a Boss Chuck at its head.

BANKS WILL EXTEND CREDIT FOR REMODELING OF HOMES

the following letter from C. H. Pope, president of the District of Columbia Bankers Association:

February 17, 1933.

Washington Board of Trade,
Washington, D. C.
Gentlemen:

The meeting called by the Board of Trade at which members of the District Bankers Association were asked to meet with representatives of civic and business organizations for the purpose of finding ways and means of assisting home owners to remodel and make needed repairs to their homes, and at the same time give employment to the mechanics and others, which this work would supply, has resulted in a committee of the Bankers Association recommending to its association that we heartily indorse this movement.

I am pleased to advise you that at a special meeting of our association the report of this committee was adopted. The digest of the report is herewith inclosed.

The banks have agreed to make loans up to their individual quotas in the aggregate to an initial amount of $500,000.

It is hoped this may develop into something well worth the united efforts of all those interested in our city. Very truly yours,

(Signed.)
C. H. POPE, President.

Together with the letter, the bankers set up the following plan:

Purpose—To provide funds to be used by homeowners to remodel, repair and redecorate their homes, thereby stimulating employment and business activity, and at the same time arresting depreciation of their property by improving its physical condition and appearance at the present time.

To accomplish these purposes with a reasonable degree of safety to the banks who are to lend the money, the following general plan is outlined:

Who may borrow—Each bank will lend to its own depositors who are homeowners and to other homeowners when the note is indorsed by a responsible and satisfactory depositor.

Loans up to $500—To spread the benefit of the plan among a large number of homeowners, loans will be made in any amount up to $500 to any one borrower.

Easy monthly payments: To make repayment easy to borrowers these loans will be payable in equal monthly instalments with minimum payments of $10 per month. But all loans must be repaid in twelve months or less.

Loans will be granted to homeowners whose equity in their property and their ability to repay the new loan is satisfactorily demonstrated to the bank.

Cost to borrowers: While small loans are expensive to a bank to handle and the legal rate of interest thereon does not cover the cost of handling them, nevertheless all loans under this plan will be made at the rate of 6 per cent per annum.

Application for the loans: In order to facilitate the making of loans each home owner should:

1. Get an "application form" from his bank.
2. Secure at least "two bids" for the work to be done.
3. Furnish a receipt or other evidence that interest due on his mortgage has been paid.
4. Exhibit a receipt showing that all taxes due have been paid.

After filling out the application and complying with the other requirements set forth above the applicant should deliver all papers to his bank.

Applications for loans may be made any time between now and August 19, 1933.

The movement in Washington being undertaken by the Board of Trade is an enlargement of similar successful movements in other cities, particularly in Philadelphia, where it has resulted in the expenditure of many millions of dollars in material and the employment of thousands of persons out of work, and the general improvement of the community and the value of the property so renovated.

Cooperation of Banks.

The enlargement of the activity carried on in other cities and its practical application to the community has been made possible by the splendid and generous cooperation of the banks of the city whose attitude has made possible the project, as will be indicated in the demonstration.

To accomplish the purpose the committee of the board which consists of Arthur B. Heaton, chairman, E. J. Murphy, vice chairman; Robert J. Cottrell, secretary; Ben T. Webster, Lanier McLachlen, Claude W. Owen, F. G. Addison, jr., Robert V. Fleming, Harry Blake, W. W. Everett, John Saul, H. K. Boss, Fleming Newbold, O. O. Kuhn, C. H. Pope, John Poole, Francis Sullivan, E. C. Brandenburg, Charles H. Tompkins, George Plitt, William S. Corby, and John Hanna will ask for the donation of some old one-story frame house not over 20 by 30 feet so that it may be moved to the site though the streets economically. Architects and draftsmen of the city will then conduct their competitive program and the house will then be remodeled in full view of the public and every attention will be given to indicate how economically this can be done, all costs being carefully kept for the information of those who wish to inquire at an information booth which will be erected near the house. At this information booth information will be given as to how to go about modernizing in all its phases, and it is suggested that those who have a suitable small house to donate to this cause may get in touch with the campaign committee, Board of Trade offices, 204 the Evening Star Building.

Virginia Report Shows Increase of Seedlings

Charlottesville, Va., Feb. 18 (A.P.). An increase of 23 per cent was shown during 1932 in the number of forest tree seedlings and transplants distributed from the nursery here as compared with 1931.

F. C. Pederson, acting State forester, said in his annual report to the United States Forest Service, which cooperates in the work, that 366,533 seedlings and transplants were distributed during the year. Nearly all of these trees were distributed for reforesting idle lands in Virginia. A small number were distributed to schools and for memorial plantings.

LAWYER UNDER STAY OF SENTENCE KILLED

Private Detective Accused of Slaying Attorney Cited for Contempt.

Charleston, W. Va., Feb. 18 (A.P.). A few hours after he had been granted a stay on a six months sentence for contempt of Federal court, W. S. Pullen, 40, Charleston attorney, was shot to death in his office today.

Police arrested T. H. Bailes, one-armed operator of a private detective agency, and charged him with the shooting.

L. V. Adkins, who told police he was an eye witness, informed them, they said, that Bailes entered Pullen's office and accused the attorney of illegal practice in handling an appeal case for Mrs. Bailes.

Police said Adkins told them after a short argument Bailes drew a pistol and fired four times at Pullen. The latter died on the way to a hospital.

The officers said Bailes denied Adkins' statement and told them Pullen fired at him and that he took the pistol from Pullen and shot in self-defense.

Pullen was given a six months jail term some time ago by Federal Judge George W. McClintic for contempt of court. He and another attorney were convicted of appropriating an automobile that had been released from custody of the court.

Elmer Piper Expires.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 18.—Elmer E. Piper, 60, former city engineer and county surveyor, died at his home here today.

3 Hurt as Auto Overturns On Falls Church Highway

Washington Girl and Brother, Students at University of Virginia, Seriously Injured in Attempt to Pass Another Car.

Miss Frances Dabney, 17, and her brother, Peter Dabney, 20, both of Washington, were seriously injured late yesterday afternoon when their car overturned on the Lee highway in Falls Church, Va. William A. Melvin, 20, of Newport News, Va., also in the car, suffered abrasions about the face.

According to witnesses, the Dabney car was attempting to pass another and ran off the left side of the highway. The soft shoulders of the road caused the driver to lose control of the machine, which turned over several times, landing on its top. Persons at a nearby filling station pulled the unconscious youths from under the car, which had caught fire, and rushed them to Emergency Hospital here.

Miss Dabney and her brother are students at the University of Virginia and were visiting their father, Dr. Virginius Dabney, of 1633 Connecticut avenue northwest. They had borrowed their father's care for a ride in Virginia and were returning to Washington when the accident occurred.

At the hospital last night it was said that Miss Dabney was suffering from a laceration of the left eye and cheek, and her brother from concussions of the head and shock. Their condition was declared serious.

"And the Scotchman Said"

Such Is What a Teacher May Tell Her Class if Dr. Ballou's Proposed Personal Graphic Rating Scale Is Adopted.

"There was an Irishman and a Scotchman," the teacher told her class, "and the Scotchman said to the Irishman——"

This isn't straight reporting of an incident in a local public school, but a speculative forecast of what may be the rule in classrooms if a proposed graphic rating scale for teachers, proposed by Dr. Frank W. Ballou, superintendent of schools, goes into effect.

Personal equipment of a teacher as evidenced by a sense of humor, is one of the classifications on which pedagogues would be rated under the superintendent's plan. Other personnel equipment includes personal vigor, emotional stability, cultural background, wholesome outlook on life and sincerity.

The rating plan has been submitted by Dr. Ballou to the Teachers' Council for its opinion and has not yet been studied by the Board of Education.

The professional attitude of teachers would be tested by their cooperation with school officers and other teachers in carrying out a program; professional ethics and understanding of the purposes of and functions of the public school in a Democratic society.

The rating scale is divided into two parts: What the teacher brings to his work and the classroom and technique of teaching. On the basis of these facts, a rating officer would decide whether the teacher is satisfactory or unsatisfactory.

MIAMI FAILURE REGRETTED IN NOTE; FIVE ARE ARRESTED

first names of Thompson and Birmingham, and after a two-day investigation located them. Although they both declared it was intended as a joke, authorities said they would try to make an "example" of them.

The other three men questioned were absolved of connection with the case. They are Edward T. P. Rodriguez, 41; Frank Petiti, 32, and Patrick McCartin, 42. McCartin was held, however, when police discovered, they said, that his citizenship papers were not in order. Rodriguez and Petiti were released.

After questioning by police, Rodriguez and Petiti were released, but Birmingham and Thompson were held for investigation by the district attorney's office tomorrow, and McCartin was held for immigration authorities. Police are convinced that McCartin has no connection with the case.

Text of Letter.

The letter read in part:

"Capital City, morning after first unsuccessful attempt.

"Dear sir and brother:

"With my most sincere regrets am forced to tell you of my brother bricklayer's unsuccessful attempt on the life of our President-elect and am also forced to say that everything here is in order. If I were the one who had the honor of shooting at our present President I assure that I would take a week to practice and would really make a job of it. It seems a shame that we have in our midst a man with such a poor aim. I do believe we should have a place where we could all go and practice up on our shooting as it looks like open season on Presidents and politicians.

"As I walked down Capitol Hill the day before yesterday in the snow and sleet, what an error the public has made in not making me their President. My cabinet would consist of you as vice president, who knows more of vice in all its forms than you. My sec of State would be none other than the well-known William Birm, of the State confusion. sec of the treas, Joseph Marley, of the left court building of Newark. Then I would think Fran and James Craft would be next in line for the army and navy posts.

"Floundered Foot and Hagel would be my personal guards. You could have Stapleton and Shahady the syrian stinkweed for your aids.

"The other jobs would go to Gerald Geraldinam Fitz and those other mugs in that motley crew that congregate around there. I regret to say that we arn't making the progress we should be making. No fault of our own.

"I guess we can credit it to the great Impersonation. He doesn't seem to be very active of late. He doesn't even go fishing any more. However, Bill and I have enrolled in that vast army of the unemployed. It's hard to say just how long we will last there as there isn't a thing to be had here at all. I have several promises of a job at my trade but they don't materialize. I do think that last night's occurrence at Miami will stimulate work for the bricklayers throughout the country, as an unemployed bricklayer is a bad thing to have around. Especially around the Capital City where we can take a shot at the Nation's leaders at most any time. It sure is tough getting up at 6 a. m. and hitting these jobs without any success, day after day, with no encouragement. And then home to get Birn out of bed to eat his lunch. Poor Bill has been resting so long he is tired of resting, so he just lays in bed to pass the time.

Started to Work.

"I don't see Fran so I don't know how he is doing, but I don't think he is working at all. Jim started to work yesterday as a laborer on the new Postoffice building so I guess they will get by as long as one of them is working.

"There doesn't seem to be any more for me to convey to you just at present, so I suppose I may as well discontinue punching hell out of this poor defenseless machine as it sure takes an awful beating when I sit and let my finger ramble over the noisy keys. I hope you will extend both Bill's and my greetings and felicitations to all those who are near and dear to me, especially the Marleys. Tell Joe I miss his dear wife and her delicious cocoa. I am sure he will appreciate my feelings. In closing may I add that you take very good care of yourself and don't get caught in any situation similar to the one of our esteemed friend Mullins.

"Caught you in. And don't get your feet wet for you know Birm was once a very healthy lad, but those wet feet have made a great change. Let that be an example and always wear your rubbers.

"Let us hear from you at the first possible opportunity. Hoping you and yours are in the pink and weathering this great international depression in the great Jones manner,

"Yours as is,
"HARRY TAFT AND WILLIAM R."

Regards Letter as Joke.

Newark, N. J., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Irving "Bud" Jones, the addressee of a letter, found in Washington, which caused the arrest of five men there, said today he regards the letter as a practical joke, and believes he can easily prove it. Jones is a dispatcher at the Mertz bus terminal here.

"I can straighten the whole thing out in a few minutes," he told a reporter. Two of the men, Harry Taft Thompson and William R. Birmingham, are Newark residents, he said, who left here three or four months ago.

Secret Service men questioned him today about the letter, Jones said. He described Thompson as a practical joker, and recalled that he had received a letter from him several weeks ago ordering him to report for "spring training in baseball" although neither he nor Thompson plays ball.

CATHEDRAL VISITED BY 251,163 IN 1932

All States and Many Foreign Countries Represented in Pilgrimages.

More than a quarter of a million people, including pilgrims and worshipers visited Washington Cathedral on Mount Saint Alban during 1932, Bishop James E. Freeman announced yesterday.

The exact figures were 251,163 persons representing visitors from every State in the Union and many foreign countries. This tabulation, made under the direction of James P. Berkeley, head verger, refers only to those who came within the Cathedral walls for services or pilgrimages. It does not include other thousands who, while not actually entering the edifice, were in the Cathedral Close during the year to visit the College of Preachers, the Cathedral Schools, the Library, the Bishop's Garden, or the Cathedral offices.

Last May broke all Cathedral records for visitors, 46,101 being counted that month. This impressive total was due in part to the opening of the Great Choir and Sanctuary for regular worship on Ascension Day. More and More Washington Cathedral is recognized as an unofficial gauge of tourist travel to the National Capital because of the nation-wide interest in it.

Despite Economic Conditions.

Despite the general economic conditions only 2,336 fewer persons came to the Cathedral last year than in 1931. Additional crowds expected for the George Washington Bicentennial did not make their appearance.

The Cathedral authorities welcome residents of Washington as well as visitors to the National Capital to make pilgrimages to Mount St. Alban to see the Cathedral or to attend services. A staff of Pilgrim Aids, under the direction of Canon John W. Gummere, are on daily duty to describe the Cathedral to pilgrims. Tours take place at frequent intervals during the week days. On Sundays there are larger pilgrimages at 12:15 and 5 p. m., immediately following the services in the great choir. No previous notice is necessary for participation in these pilgrimages. Those interested are asked to assemble in the Chapel of St. John in the south choir aisle.

Speaking of pilgrimages made by Washington organizations and schools, Canon Gummere said yesterday:

"The cathedral is being used increasingly by the schools of the city, especially for classes in art, architecture and history. Women's clubs and other organizations are welcome on Sundays as well as on week days. The Lord's Day pilgrimages enable the members to gain inspiration from the beautiful evensong or morning services. The cathedral would be glad to welcome Sunday school groups at the evensong services, not only from Episcopal churches, but from those of other communions as well, if such pilgrimages could be arranged for Sunday afternoon hours, when they will not conflict with local parish or church appointments."

Occuping a woodland tract of 67½ acres, 400 feet above the Potomac River, the cathedral close provides many points of interest for pilgrims. Among these are the tranquil bishop's garden, in which have been assembled many plantings of historical significance; the peace cross, erected at the close of the Spanish-American War; the Glastonbury thorn, scion of the famed holy thorn of Glastonbury, in England; the baptismal font, lined with stones from the River Jordan; the Glastonbury cathedra, or bishop's chair, constructed of stones from the original Glastonbury Abbey, in England; the College of Preachers, first institution of its kind in the United States; the memorial wing of the cathedral library, housing rare religious volumes; the cathedral schools for boys and girls, and finally the cathedral itself.

North Transept Completed.

Construction of the north transept has just been completed. Cathedral pilgrims from among the inauguration visitors will be able to see the great North Rose window, now being installed in the new portion of the edifice towering above Woodley road near Thirty-sixth street.

Created in the cathedral's stained glass studio at Huntingdon Valley, Pa., under the direction of Lawrence B. Saint, it tells the story of the "Last Judgment" and is one of the largest and most beautiful windows completed for any church in America.

A national patriotic service in honor of the inauguration of President Franklin Delano Roosevelt will be held in the cathedral on Sunday afternoon, March 5, at 4 o'clock, with many notable guests in the congregation.

Los Angeles Planning Welcome for Hoover

Los Angeles, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The Republican county committee plans a nonpartisan welcome to Herbert Hoover through a group of 200 Southern California citizens when he arrives here after Franklin D. Roosevelt is inaugurated President March 4.

Chairman Ingall W. Bull said today Mr. Hoover, arriving by way of the Panama Canal en route to his Palo Alto, Calif., home, will be the guest at a breakfast and will be asked to address a mass meeting later.

Hagerstown, Md., Feb. 18. (Special)—Investigation of an incendiary fire at the home of Roy McKinsey here last night was being made by the police. McKinsey, aroused by smoke, found the side of his home afire, and after the blaze was extinguished, found kindling over which kerosene had been poured that had been fired beneath a rear porch.

Along Automobile Row

Whitney Leary and Stanley Horner left early in the week on a motor trip to Florida where they will spend the next two weeks deep sea fishing. This is an annual outing with them and there are rumors that some more of the local automobile fraternity will join them before the month is out.

Robert C. Graham, vice president of Graham Paige Motors Corporation, was the guest of Joseph Kingston, manager of Graham Motor Sales Co., their local branch, last Monday and Tuesday. Mr. Graham is making his annual swing around the circuit checking up on automobile sales conditions.

The Modern Auto Sales Co., 2303 Fourteenth street, which is under the management of H. R. Bland, the other officials being A. Lapkoff and Leon Cherner, have taken a city dealership for Willys 77.

Ford dealers of this city are very optimistic over the manner in which the public have expressed their approval of the new Ford which had its initial showing last week. They are also elated over the fact that they can make immediate delivery on the new car, something that was not possible when the previous model was announced last spring.

George Stroyer, of the Chevrolet Motor Co. zone office in Baltimore, has been placed in charge of the Washington factory sales and has opened an office in the Transportation Building. Before coming to Washington, Mr. Stroyer was in charge of sales promotion for the Baltimore zone, which includes Washington.

SENATE DEMOCRATS HIDE ECONOMY PLAN

Robinson and Hayden Refuse to Divulge How They Expect to Save.

(Associated Press.)

A plan for senatorial economies is materializing among Democratic members, but just what they have in mind is being kept for the moment strictly among themselves.

Whether it will shoot at the Aspirin, mouthwash and gargle items, the $8,000-a-year barber shop, the $9,000 mineral water bill, hair brush expenditures, expensive brass cuspidors and the like is a subject on which they won't comment.

The best informed opinion is that the problem will not—but that some members of the party, when the proposal comes up on the floor, will remind the Senate of these and suggest they ought to be eliminated.

Senator Hayden (Democrat), Arizona, at present is working on the outlines of the plan, with the assistance of colleagues assigned informally by the Democratic conference to aid him.

Hayden won't say what he has in mind, adding he prefers not to until the plan is all ready, but here is what Democratic Leader Robinson, of Arkansas, had to say:

May Save $40,000.

"We are working on a program with a prospect of reducing senatorial expenditures $35,000 or $40,000 a year. I'm not going into details about it now."

It is pretty well understood that one of the primary aims of the program will be to reduce the pay of those employes, such as doorkeepers and messengers, who are paid on a yearly basis, but work only while the Senate is in session.

Hayden already has given notice that he would seek to suspend the rules to consider the program on which he is working, which will be offered as an amendment to the $16,000,000 legislative supply bill when it comes up next week.

The bill carries $2,900,000 for the Senate and $7,000,000 for the House, with the balance going to the Government Printing Office, Library of Congress, Botanic Gardens and other Federal agencies.

Rules Suspension Needed.

Senate regulations require suspension of the rules before legislation, such as the Hayden program, can be put on an appropriation bill. If his amendment is taken up, the way will be opened for amendment to it covering the barber shop and other costs.

As the supply bill was reported by the Senate Appropriations Committee last week, no restrictions against spending some of the funds for the barber shop, restaurants and the other items were included.

While the Hayden amendment was being prepared, some of his colleagues laid their plans to suggest on the floor that the Senate limit to $1,000 funeral expenditures, which in the past have risen as high as $25,000 for a member, as well as other limitations, such as paying widows only the salary her husbatnd would have received from the date of death to the end of the year, instead of a whole year, as at at present.

Arrows (A, B and C) indicate the direction of Japanese advance on Jehol.

Manchukuo Ultimatum Believed Here Forerunner of War.

(Associated Press.)

Manchukuo's ultimatum to Gen. Chang Hsiao-Liang that Chinese forces must evacuate Jehol Province immediately or suffer an attack from the joint armies of Manchukuo and Japan is regarded in Washington as the formal opening of major military operations.

This order from Manchukuo, which the League of Nations conciliation committee has just denied recognition in most emphatic terms, is considered by Washington diplomats to be the studied reply of the Japanese created regime to the Geneva report.

Plans for the sweeping movement to clear Jehol of Chinese soldiers have been in preparation for weeks. The Japanese have repeatedly warned Chinese officials that a concentration of Chinese troops in Jehol would make it necessary for the Japanese to launch an attack in that direction.

Foreign military observers have been predicting for a year that Japan would eventually drive all the Chinese soldiers from the Jehol area to protect the narrow southeastern tip of Manchuria against flanking movements from that province, which lies immediately west of Manchuria.

The Southeastern tip of Manchuria between the sea and Jehol Province contains the railway line connecting Manchuria with North China. This narrow zone skirting the Gulf of Liaotung is less than 50 miles wide for a distance of over 100 miles and is an extremely exposed position which the Japanese Navy is supporting with a fleet centered at Chinwangtao and Hulutao, the only ports of consequence along this portion of the Manchurian coast. At many points along this coast the railway is within sight of the sea.

Kailu, which lies more than 100 miles north of the Great Wall and only a few miles east of the Manchurian border, is the chief northern gateway to Chihfeng and Jehol City, the two most important strategic points in the interior of Jehol Province.

The Chinese are reported to have between 30,000 and 50,000 troops concentrated in the Kailu area to check the Japanese movement. But the Chinese forces are mostly volunteers, poorly equipped and lack airplane support, while the Japanese already have planes bombing the Kailu route.

Kailu is approximately 300 miles by unimproved highway from Jehol City. The latter is only about 100 miles north of Peking and has a hard-surfaced highway over which Chang Hsiao-Liang can move troops from the old Chinese capital. Chang is reported to have about a quarter of a million soldiers in North China and Jehol Province.

He has announced that threats of Japanese invasion of Jehol Province will not prevent his forces from defending Chinese soil to the best of their ability.

The Japanese forces in Manchuria are estimated at 100,000. Of recent weeks these troops have been concentrating in the area south of Mukden in preparation for the Jehol drive.

Leaders Mark Time on Plan Of Montgomery Bond Issue

Civic Federation Has Indorsed Proposal and Other Groups in County Are Expected to Do Likewise During Coming Week.

Montgomery County Bureau of The Post.
9103 Conn. Ave., North Chevy Chase, Md.
Telephone Wisconsin 4205.

Democratic administration officials of Montgomery County are marking time on the proposal to issue bonds totaling $450,000 for road and school purposes until the sentiment of the public is ascertained.

The bond issue has been approved by the Montgomery County Civic Federation, the largest citizens body in the county, by a 2-to-1 vote in order that the road program which was approved in 1931 by the federation can be completed. The board of directors of the Montgomery County Farm Bureau has gone on record as being opposed to any further bond issues. The farm bureau represents the rural sections, where the road building program has been completed, and its action is believed a forerunner of the stand the Farmers Convention at Sandy Spring next Saturday will assume.

The Montgomery Government Club, which ranks with the civic federation as one of the largest groups in the county, having constituent groups in each election district, will meet Friday night at the Bethesda School to discuss the proposal. It is expected the club will indorse the bond issue and completion of the building program.

With the civic federation and Government Club indorsing the project, it is believed that the county delegation to the State Legislature will go forward with legislation providing for the issuance of the bonds, $300,000 for road building purposes and $150,000 for school construction purposes.

Maj. E. Brooke Lee, county Democratic leader, is expected to be a speaker at the farmers' convention Saturday. He will outline the proposed bond issue and the necessity for their issuance. He also will speak at the Monegomery Government Club meeting.

The bond issue proposed is expected to be the last necessary for several years, probably at least six, as it completes the program on which the administration has been working and provides a road and school system in keeping with the needs of the county that will suffice with small additions for years, administration officials say.

Diversion of gasoline tax funds which had been counted on as part of the money for the road program and other slight rearrangements of county funds in order that a cut of some 23 to 30 cents or more in the county tax rate can be consummated have made the bonds necessary, officials say, in order that the program can be completed. Failure to issue the bonds means abrupt halting of the program and failure to complete some of the most important items in the program.

The Montgomery County Civic Federation will meet Thursday at 8 p. m. at the Bethesda School to resume the meeting which was recessed Monday because of the lateness of the hour, according to an anonuncement by Frederic P. Lee, president.

The meeting will be devoted primarily to matters requiring legislative action at the present session of the Maryland Legislature.

F. M. Wilcox was elected president of the Review & Herald Publishing Association, which publishes the official papers and magazines of the Seventh Day Adventist denomination, at the annual meeting of the constituency at Takoma Park. W. H. Branson and E. L. Richmond were elected vice presidents, and L. W. Graham was elected secretary-treasurer. New trustees were elected as follows: W. H. Branson, W. H. Williams, C. C. Pulver, H. J. Detweiler, W. H. Holden, J. K. Jones, M. E. Gern and C. P. Bollman.

The Bethesda Community Garden Club will meet at the clubhouse Friday at 10:30 a. m. instead of Wednesday, according to an announcement by Mrs. H. Edmund Bullis.

Thomas H. MacDonald, chief of the United States Bureau of Public Roads, Department of Agriculture, will talk on "The Mount Vernon Highway." Mr. McDonald was the sponsor for the idea of building the highway. As chief engineer of the Iowa State Highway Commission, Mr. MacDonald was largely instrumental in building up the Iowa highway system.

Following the lecture, luncheon will be served. Mrs. I. L. Shear, chairman of the hostess committee, will be assisted by Mrs. G. S. Hane, Mrs. M. L. Leet, Mrs. Eugene V. Pugh, Mrs. R. B. Locker and Mrs. E. F. Kohman.

A card party for the benefit of Our Lady of Lourdes Catholic Church, Bethesda, Md., will be held at 8:15 p. m. Thursday in the parish hall of Sacred Heart Church, Sixteenth street and Park road northwest.

The following patrons have been announced: The Rev. James O'Connor, Mr. and Mrs. Oswalt F. Schuette, Mr. and Mrs. Leslie B. Bell, Dr. and Mrs. J. F. O'Donnell, Mr. and Mrs. George E. Hamilton, Mrs. R. Day, Mr. and Mrs. Earl Carlin, Mr. and Mrs. Charles B. Offutt, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Cremen, Mr. and Mrs. John Overholt, Mr. and Mrs. J. F. Downey, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Kennedy, Mr. and Mrs. Victor Mersch, Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Welsh, Miss Edith Thompson, Mr. and Mrs. Donald Hunter, Mrs. W. B. Rabbitt, Mr. and Mrs. Jo Morgan, Mr. and Mrs. William H. Turton, Mr. and Mrs. J. W. Lowe, Mr. and Mrs. F. Tully, Mr. and Mrs. M. J. Reilly, Thomas W. Perry, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Dean, Mr. and Mrs. Roy Cross, Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Stafford, Miss M. Walmsley, Dr. and Mrs. A. W. Shea, Mr. and Mrs. B. T. Hartz, Mrs. Margaret Baptista, Mr. and Mrs. Warner E. Pumphrey, R. B. Sadler, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Dacy and Mr. and Mrs. Carl Plitt.

OFFICER IS 'OUSTED' BY LITTLE CONGRESS

Members' Secretaries Drop Sergeant at Arms as Useless Appendage.

Another sergeant at arms met disciplinary action at the hands of a congressional body last night when the "Little Congress," an organization composed of secretaries to senators and representatives, met to consider what should be done about an article appearing in the Old Outlook magazine in a recent issue.

Meeting at the Mayflower Hotel for their annual banquet, the group decided that they didn't need a sergeant at arms anyway, and went on with the program.

Elmore Whitehurst, speaker of the congress, explained that "congressmen work from rising to setting sun, but that the work of their secretaries is never done."

Senator William J. Bulow, of South Dakota, guest speaker of the evening, was introduced as a rival to the late Chauncey Depew and Will Rogers. Talking about Cabinet members, he stated that somewhere in "Aesop's Fables" he had read of a man that had carried his hat on a trailer, because it did not fit in the carriage.

He stated that practically every topic was taboo when talking on the floor of the Senate, so he would resort to a discussion on technocracy. As that was so recent, nothing had been done about it, he said.

Technocrats, he asserted, wanted to substitute robots for workmen, and have these mechanical beings controlled by one man. This, he said, was modeled after the structure of the House of Representatives, where one man pressed the button and more than 40 men start to work.

The "Hoodoo Doctors," who wished to sell us the idea of technocracy have a number of "gadgets" which sound like interesting material for a filibuster, he said.

The celebration last night marked the fourteenth annual meeting of the "Little Congress." The meetings and deliberations of the body are modeled after the rules and regulations of the House of Representatives.

Officer's Son Held In Boston Shooting

Alteration Arises Over Alleged Remarks to Victim's Mother.

Boston, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Robert McLaughlin, son of the late Superior Court Judge John D. McLaughlin, was seriously wounded tonight and police held Horace H. Duffill, 25, of Frankfort, Ky., in connection with the shooting. He was charged with assault with intent to kill and having a weapon without a permit.

McLaughlin was shot three times in the Back Bay home of Duffill's mother. His condition was said to be serious at the City Hospital.

Police said Duffill told them he was the son of Capt. Harrison Duffill, stationed at Camp Knox, Ky., and that his parents were divorced several years ago. An altercation arose, police said Duffill told them, over alleged remarks McLaughlin made to Mrs. Duffill.

LINCOLN-DOUGLASS CELEBRATION HELD

Musolit Club Hears Skits on Elks Controversy Over "Green Pastures."

The annual Lincoln-Douglass celebration of the Musolit Club was featured last night with an address on Frederick Douglass, by Truly Hatchett, of Baltimore, prominently mentioned as a candidate for the position of Recorder of Deeds of the District of Columbia under the incoming administration, and an address on Abraham Lincoln, by Judge James A. Cobb, of the Municipal Court.

A program of skits was broadcast by radio, giving colorful treatment to the controversy between the colored Elks and "The Green Pastures" cast concerning a performance to be given at the National Theater on February 26, and the activities of the colored group in the Democratic inaugural committee, headed by G. David Houston, principal of the Armstrong High School and a classmate of the President-elect at Harvard.

Richard B. Harrison, "De Lawd" of "The Green Pastures," was a special guest, and extended an invitation to the club membership to attend the performance, especially J. Finley Wilson, grand exalted ruler of Elks, who banned the performance as an Elk benefit because of the theater's general policy of exclusion of Negroes. Wilson declined, following a spirited debate with "De Lawd" on the merits of the proposition.

Other speakers were Perry W. Howard, Joseph H. Douglass, Haley G. Douglass, the Rev. F. I. A. Bennett and M. Grant Lucas, president of the club.

Old Chinese Shadow Plays Will Be Presented March 9

Chinese shadow plays, a new form of dramatic art for Washington but 1,000 years old in China, will be presented here on March 9 at 9 p. m., at the studio of Miss Ada Rainey.

Miss Genevieve Wimsatt, recently returned from China, will present the plays with a complete set of "Shadow Men," which she brought back with her.

In the plays to be given an attempt will be made to follow the ancient Chinese dramas. Miss Wimsatt has followed the ancient model in the translation of the plays, which are entirely understandable and amusing to a modern audience.

The players are silhouette puppets made of the skin of an ass' stomach and are painted in brilliant colors to make seductive shadows of line and color on a screen.

Miss Wimsatt is now writing the first English book on shadow plays.

Capital Girl Sues For Auto Injuries

Margaret Abell Files Claim Against Ship Carpenter for $25,000.

Norfolk, Va., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Damages of $25,000 are asked in a suit docketed in the city circuit court here today by Miss Margaret Abell, daughter of Woodley F. Abell, of Washington, D. C., against Harold F. McCarty, chief carpenter aboard the U. S. S. Indianapolis, as a result of injuries she sustained in an automobile accident in Washington last April 26.

Her father also brought a suit for $5,000 against the same defendant for property damages to his car, the loss of the services of his daughter and the cost of caring for her injuries.

Miss Abell was riding in a car which collided with one alleged to have been driven by McCarty and she suffered a fractured arm, fractured nose, two broken teeth, permanent scars about the face and other injuries.

King Wants Probe Of Soviet Affairs

Utahan Urges Inquiry by U. S. Before Russia Is Recognized.

(Associated Press.)

A resolution for a Senate inquiry into matters bearing on recognition of Russia was introduced yesterday by Senator King (Democrat), Utah. It set forth that a full investigation should be had before any steps toward recognition are taken. The resolution said there is "extensive propaganda" urging recognition of the Soviet.

It proposed that the foreign relations committee investigate "the economic, political and other conditions existing in the Union of Soviet Socialist Republics," including the attitude of that government toward the United States.

King did not ask immediate consideration. The resolution went to the Foreign Relations Committee for consideration.

BOYS CLUB SELECTS BOARD OF DIRECTORS

First Meeting of New Body Will Be Held Friday to Plan Scholarships.

Frank R. Jelleff has been reelected president of the Boys' Club of Washington, Charles M. Fyfe, executive director of the club, announced yesterday. Henry M. Brawner, jr., was elected first vice president; William A. Russell, reelected, second vice president; Harold A. Brooks, treasurer, and Roland Whitehurst, reelected, secretary. William Clabaugh & Co. were named as auditors.

New members of the board of directors are Charles Tompkins, Ernest H. Daniel, Joseph D. Kaufman, Clarence Norment, jr., Wash B. Williams, Sidney F. Taliaferro, Judge Robert E. Mattingly, Harry King, Maj. Henry P. Erwin, Karl W. Corby, Horace L. Stevenson and F. H. Eastman. The following were reelected to the board: Joseph Burkart, John Dolph, Clarence L. Harding, Robert M. Hicks, Albert F. E. Horn, Frank A. Kerr, Charles H. Pardoe, William L. Radcliffe, Foster M. Reeder, Beverly J. Smith, jr., Dr. Chester D. Swope, S. Percy Thompson and Lloyd B. Wilson.

The first meeting of the new board will be held next Friday, when plans for obtaining "scholarships" to enable the club to maintain its camp on the Wicomico River this summer will be discussed. Because the Community Chest failed to reach its goal in the last campaign, the budget committee of the Chest refused to allocate any funds for the maintenance of camps and the only method by which Camp Reeder will be operated this summer will be through the obtaining of these "scholarships" for various boys. Under this system the club makes up the difference between what the boy is actually able to pay and the cost of maintaining him for the two weeks' period.

TABLET IS PROPOSED FOR HEROIC DEAD OF STATE DEPARTMENT

Many Tragic Circumstances in World Have Taken Toll of 70 Americans.

MEASURE IN CONGRESS AUTHORIZES MEMORIAL

First to Die in Honor Roll Was Consul Palfrey, Lost With Warship in 1780.

(Associated Press.)

Revolution and other world tragedies have taken a heavy toll among American foreign service officers whose names are to be inscribed on a State Department tablet of bronze provided for in a bill which was sent to the House of Representatives after passage by the Senate.

War and religious uprisings have also accounted for fatalities in the American personnel scattered in far-flung parts of the world.

Since the earliest days of the United States' national existence more than 70 diplomatic and consular officers have lost their lives under "heroic or tragic circumstances," as the tablet will set forth, in line of duty in times of trouble as well as in periods of peace.

Victims of Mysterious Crimes.

Several individuals have been victims of murder and other mysterious crimes. Earthquakes, volcanic eruptions and hurricanes have caused a number of deaths in the service, while more than 30 have been victims of fevers and various diseases of the tropics.

The first American to die in this line of service was Col. William Palfrey, of Massachusetts, who in 1780 was appointed "consul to reside in France." He sailed for his post on the U. S. S. Shillala, an armed ship of sixteen guns. The vessel was sighted passing the Delaware capes, but was never heard from again.

Thirty-two years later, during Napoleon's retreat from Moscow, Joel Barlow, of Connecticut, died while on an official mission to meet the great leader. Barlow, appointed Minister Plenipotentiary to France early in 1811, had been invited by Napoleon, then at the height of his Russian campaign, to meet him near the Russian frontier for diplomatic discussions.

Arriving at Vilna, now in Poland, the American encountered the French army in disordered retreat toward the west. Barlow was taken sick at a nearby village. Among strangers who could not speak his language, the minister died of cold and privation on Christmas Day, 1812.

Roll Goes Back 100 Years.

One of the most discussed deaths in the service of more recent date was that of Robert W. Imbrie, of Washington, D. C., vice consul at Teheran, Persia, who in July, 1924, was killed in the street by a mob of religious fanatics who claimed that they had mistaken the American for a member of the Bahais sect, against which the rioters were demonstrating.

The Foreign Service Association was prompted to consider a fitting memorial for their predecessors who had died in line of work at the time of the death of Consul Giles Russell Taggart, of Woodbury, N. J., who succumbed to pneumonia contracted while serving at his post in Belize during the hurricane and tidal wave which swept British Honduras in the autumn of 1931.

Going back more than 100 years, a partial list of officers who died under tragic or heroic circumstances follows:

Harris F. Fudger, of Massachusetts, consul at Santa Marta, Colombia, murdered at Bogota, in August 1826. The legation reported Fudger was "stabbed to the heart with his own sword, his throat cut and his trunks pillaged of their contents. No trace of assassins."

Rounseville Wildman, of California, consul general at Hongkong, homeward bound, lost at sea, February 22, 1901, with his family, when the ship Rio de Janerio struck a hidden rock at the entrance of the Golden Gate, San Francisco. One hundred and 28 lives were lost.

Thomas T. Prentis, of Massachusetts, consul at Martinique, West Indies, killed with his wife, May 8, 1902, by the eruption of Mount Pelee. Another victim of the same catastrophe was Amedee Testhart, of Louisana, vice consul at Martinique.

Killed in Mesina Quake.

Arthur S. Cheney, of Connecticut, consul at Messina, Italy, killed with Mrs. Cheney on December 28, 1908, in the earthquake which partly destroyed Messina.

Robert Ney McNeely, of North Carolina, consul at Aden, Arabia, during the war, lost at sea, with the S. S. Persia, torpedoed in the Mediterranean, in December 1915.

Alfred L. M. Gottschalk, of New York, consul general at Rio de Janerio, lost at sea in June 1918, while en route to Brazil on the U. S. S. Cyclops. All the officer are enlisted men of the Navy on the ship have been declared officially dead, the disappearance of the Cyclops being listed as a mystery.

Max D. Kirjassoff, of Connecticut, consul at Yokohama, with his wife, killed in the Japanese earthquake of September 1, 1923. Paul E. Jenks, of New York, the vice consul, met death in the same disaster.

The roll of honor will include more than 30 names of Americans in the foreign service who died at their posts from diseases not encountered in the ordinary course of life in this country.

One of these was Beverly L. Clarke, of Kentucky, resident minister in Guatemala, who shortly prior to his death in 1860 cabled the department here: "My strength is now so far exhausted that I can not bear the journey to the steamer to go on leave. I am and have been the victim of almost every disease known to tropical climates."

Around the Town

WITH THE STROLLER.

Random Reflections.

E STREET from Ninth to the kiosk is Washington's Panhandle Row . . . the probable reasons are that the floating beggar population knows that it is a street whose major population is culled from three of the most philanthropic working classes: Stage folk, gamblers and newspaper men . . . that tipsy flower man, a fixture near Fourteenth and the Avenue, whose only sales routine is a gin-squaky, "Pretty flowers?" followed by an abashed hiccup . . . the Harrington doorman breaks out in an aria from "Tannhauser" . . . Woulfe, the Washington Hotel doorman, who looks like a field marshal, is an Irishman who spent most of his years in 'is majesty's service in Bombay; off duty he takes his mustachios for a bicycle ride . . . a couple of bums reading a window menu on the Pomona Restaurant at 2 o'clock in the morning, five hours after the place had closed . . . I'm in love with two Jelleff window models.

District Building elevators, most gloomy in town...a little kosher joint in the theater district has over its door, "Where theatrical people ALWAYS dine"...it's been open a couple of weeks...iron workers walking unceremoniously about the dizzy top of half-finished Government buildings on the Avenue, with snow underfoot...at Connecticut avenue and R street, on the east side of the street, the shop numbers begin 1703, 1705, 1707, 1709, 1711, and then 1701, followed by 1713...oh, well...wonder why all the boys who set up little street shops always sell razor sharpeners?...one of them tells me, however, that since the depression more people are sharpening old blades ...Washington's biggest gambler distributes $50,000 a year for charity, and has opened a string of houses he owns to destitute families...a local drug store recently ordered a large supply of champagne...for medicinal purposes, of course...and will clear 200 per cent profit on each bottle... tired of having their libraries sprinkled with coca-cola stains, several drug stores are moving their book departments to nearby vacant buildings... Storm warning: Mr. and Mrs. Starling and the kiddies have moved in on the west wall of the old Garfinkel Building at Thirteenth and F.

Adulation Alley.

THE little alley that is cut in the side of the National Theater and serves as an entrance to the dressing rooms has felt the tread of the greatest actors and actresses the American stage has produced. For decade upon decade the mouth of the alley has swarmed with celebrity hounds. One of the high points in adulation was reached about a year ago when Lenore Ulric was here. She minced out the airyway one afternoon after a matinee to find a horde of women blocking the entrance. She threw her corsage of pink roses into the blockade. Otherwise civilized housewives and matinee-goers reverted to the primitive and began clawing one another, actually getting down on the ground in rough and tumble combat.

This past week has seen a different crowd of theater worshipers at the alley. When the stately Richard B. Harrison, "De Lawd" of Green Pastures, stalks out with the grace and bearing of a Shakespearean actor of the distant past, after the nightly performances, he finds himself in the center of a semicircle of negro citizens, some in gleaming automobiles, others culled from their tasks as clean-up women in nearby buildings.

Prosperity Note.

Washington had three women taxi drivers last year. Only two showed up for registration as drivers this year. The remaining two are a married woman and a young unmarried woman. The husband of the third local cabwoman got a job.

Here is a state of affairs which has risen strictly since the depression. The two girls are expert drivers, diligent workers and uncomplaining in the face of a lot of alleged humor from the rear of the cab.

Pennsylvania avenue is taking on its quadrennial aura of a gigantic theater, with a mile-long stage running between packed rows of seats and boxes. The plans go forward for the staging of a parade of knockout proportions.

I wonder what those poverty-stricken humans who are the denizens of the lower avenue will think when the parade goes by. There is a family of ten living in a single room in one of the sleazy hotels between the Peace Monument and Second street. Will they believe that a new deal has come? Will they have faith that the gilt and tinsel of the inaugural ceremonies is more than skin deep? That old davul TIME will tell.

Tuba Turmoil.

SPEAKING of parades perhaps you didn't know that there is a keen-edged rivalry between our three local bands of national reputation—the Army, Navy and Marine musical battalions. Of the three there is not much doubt that the Marine Band is the best known. It's theme song, "The Halls of Montezuma," is more whistleable, which may explain things. Then, too, Sousa once led the Marine musicians.

This keen-edged rivalry has often blossomed into a beautiful jealousy, quite on a tangent from the original purposes in forming the bands. It seems that in band circles, just as in the world of State Department ceremonials, the old bugabear Precedence plays a mighty part. The Army Band gets the first seat on the right, so to speak, followed by the Navy and then the Marines, probably in the order in which these organizations became part of the scheme of the United States. Of course, the precedence has never set well with the Middies and the Marines, but has suited the Army.

In a parade in which all three appear, the Army Band is supposed to come before the others. In the last two Fireman Day parades the Army Band has seen fit to remain out of the march, although invited, because once the parade officials were in ignorance of precedence and placed the Marines up in front of the other two.

Miss Marlene Deitrich's grand publicity stunt of wearing men's clothes and the resulting sweep over the Nation the fad has started, has touched Washington at last, with more of the suits to be seen in store windows than on the street. What few girls have ventured out with their London drapes and padded shoulders have been all a-jitter and as self-conscious as a missionary simmering sans habiliment in a cannibal fricassee.

It reminds a lot of first settlers of Dr. Mary Walker, the militant medico of Civil War times, who lived on Sixth street northwest near N, and rose to national eminence as a war worker and public figure. Dr. Walker was one of the notable surgeons of the war between the States and the era of restoration. She secured permission to wear men's clothes from Congress, in deference to the ancient statute which forbade women to appear on the streets in men's clothing.

She affected a funereal black suit, with a Paderewski cape and a silk hat, somewhat too small for her. An incurable stroller, she was a familiar sight throughout the city, always armed with a tightly rolled umbrella. Her favorite walk in her later years was down Sixth street to the Pension Office and back. A serene and composed woman, who looked like a little dried-up backwoods minister of the gospel, Dr. Walker was not entirely aloof to criticism. She was wont to explain upon occasions that she affected men's clothing because it was more sensible and facilitated the movements of her active life.

She objected mostly to a bawdy rhyme the kids of her neighborhood (now grandmothers and fathers) used to chant as they walked behind her like pickaninnies behind a calliope:

"Oh Doctor Mary Walker
Wear your trousers shorter."

Garden Group to Extend More Help to Jobless

Encouraged by the success of furnishing gardens to the unemployed last year, the garden committee of the Council of Social Agencies, in cooperation with the District of Columbia committee on employment, is preparing to enlarge its activities to all parts of Washington this year.

In answer to the many requests for garden space received by W. R. Beattie, of the Departmen of Agriculture, general supervisor of the gardens last year, the Government-owned Anacostia flats will be made available this year. A survey of possible garden plots in Washington is being made under the direction of W. C. Cleary, executive secretary of the District of Columbia committee on employment.

Schwab, Optimistic, Spurns Retirement on Reaching 71

Declares "Something Will Come Along to Give Us New Impetus;" Points to American Youth, Energy and Ambition.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Charles M. Schwab, 71 years old today, said: "Some thing will come along to give us new impetus; some development that's unseen."

The financier spent his birthday at his desk in the office of the Chicago Pneumatic Tool Co. and planned no celebration.

"I have never lost the feeling," he said, "that things will be ultimately all right. I am an optimist, but the feeling is fundamental. If the world is to go on at all the United States must be always ahead, bounding on and on.

"No other nation is so endowed with the good things of God. We have youth, energy and ambition."

He spoke with the enthusiasm that might be expected of a beginner in the steel business, no trace of tiredness about him. Only his gray hair marked the veteran.

Had there been no depression, he would, he said, have "lightened the load." He sets no time limit on his service as chairman of the board of Bethelhem Steel or on any of his other interests.

"I will fight the depression so long as life lasts," he said. He did not use the tone of a warrior. He uttered the phrase by way of simple explanation, his way of announcing that he would not retire.

He is not a seer who can see around the corner—just, as he says, an optimist.

"We usually find," he elaborated, "that some unseen development comes along to take nations out of the rut. In 1900, out of the depression of '93, there came the great corporate development. Then came Edison with his electrical devices; and then radio, and so, too, something will come along to give us new impetus."

ITALY WILL DELIVER THREE SUBMARINES TO ARGENTINA SOON

Modern Underseas Fleet Will Cross Ocean in Early Spring.

7,000-MILE CRUISE TO OCCUPY ABOUT MONTH

Boats Carry 16 Torpedoes and Can Submerge in 45 Seconds.

Taranto, Italy, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Argentina may expect its first view of the three powerful submarines built for it here late in March or early in April. Plans call for the fleet to set sail from Taranto toward the end of February, and the 7,000-mile crossing should not take much over a month.

The trip will be made without stops. An average speed of from 8 to 10 knots is looked for, based on the ships' performances in recent trials. The route will be through the Mediterranean to Gibraltar, then down the African coast and across the ocean at its narrowest point.

Capt. Ramon A. Poch will command the fleet, which will have no escort ship. The Santiago Del Estero will be his flagship.

Result of Experience.

Lieut. Sadi Bonnet will be in charge of the Santa Fe, and Lieut. Rodolfo Gonzales will command the Salta. Each vessel has a crew of 41 men, all Argentines.

Officers and crews have made themselves comfortable aboard and are taking their farewells of the inhabitants of this port city, among whom they have lived while the ships were under construction.

All the wealth of experience gained by the Tosi shipyards in construction trials and actual war practice of the Mameli type submarines for the Italian navy, has gone into the building of the Argentine vessels.

These are of the Mameli class, designed by the famous Italian engineer, Virginio Cavallini, which is held in Italy to be second to none possessed by any other navy in the world.

Called Best of Type.

For ships of their displacement—950 tons on the surface and 1,150 submerged—the Argentine vessels are declared to be unequaled in point of torpedo armament, speed characteristics, stability and autonomous cruising radius.

They have a top surface speed of 18 knots, a surface cruising speed of 8 to 10 knots, submerged top speed of 9 knots and cruising speed immersed of 4 knots. Their torpedo armament consists of four tubes in the prow and four in the rear, and in addition to the eight torpedoes carried in the tubes they can carry eight in reserve.

Can Dive 114 Meters.

Enough food and supplies can be carried to last for a cruise of two months, and they can cover 10,000 miles without necessity of putting into port.

The hulls are so strong that the ships can navigate with safety at 100 meters depth. They can run 85 miles at four knots in immersion. During the contract tests they were driven for 24 consecutive hours at full speed on the surface and for 48 consecutive hours at surface cruising speed.

They dived to 114 meters and remained at that depth for more than an hour. They can disappear from the surface in 45 seconds.

HITLERISM SUCCESS DEPENDS ON YOUNG

Youthful Adherents Fighting Street Battles That Mark Campaign.

Berlin, Feb. 18 (A.P.)—Under the aegis of Adolf Hitler, German youth has entered the political arena with a grimness reserved for war in other nations.

Hitlerism is staking its future in its youth movement and it is not difficult to conceive that if these youngsters were eligible to vote today there would be no question as to the outcome of the Reichstag and Prussian Diet election March 5.

But youth of all political camps is fighting the street battles in the current campaign—becoming militant as Hitler prescribed long ago for the "salvation" of Germany. When the smoke clears away from the scenes of bombings, waylayings and clashes that have marked Germany's incipient state of civil war since Hitler's rise to power, the perpetrators or victims are generally youths, fired with hate and trained to fight to the last breath.

The ominous warnings of Hitler leaders that the March 5 elections may be the last ever held in Germany and that it does not much matter whether the chancellor is able to overcome his opposition's majorities in the Reichstag and Diet may not be empty threats. For behind them is his popularity among the younger generation.

The fact that 150,000 youths and girls are enrolled in the Nazi's strictly youth organizations, against 30,000 in the Communists, indicates which of the two radical parties is the more popular among the young. Among adults the ratio is two to one—there being only 196 Nazis to 100 Communists elected to the Reichstag dissolved early this month by the Hitler government.

The watchful eye of Hitler's Fascist party extends to the children just able to toddle, and the elementary appeal of the Hitler organization—playing soldier—seems to have caught the fancy of the militant youth of the entire country.

DIET OF MORMONS NEARS CENTENNIAL

Church to Honor "The Word of Wisdom," Promulgated February 27, 1833.

Salt Lake City, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The centennial of the giving of "the word of wisdom," in observance of which many members of the Latter Day Saints Church abstain from the use of liquor, tobacco, tea and coffee and the excessive eating of meat, will be celebrated throughout the church in the next fortnight.

Declared to have been received in a divine revelation by Joseph Smith founder of the Mormon Church, at Kirtland, Ohio, February 27, 1833, authorities of the faith say this tenet is regarded with the force of commandment by upward of half of the membership of 750 000 persons.

As to its efficacy, they cite a death rate of 7.5 per thousand among Latter Day Saints, as compared with a rate of 14 per thousand in 25 nations, and a birth rate of 30 among their members against one of 22 for the same nations.

Declaring liquor, tobacco and hot drinks are "not good for the body," the word of wisdom adds that meats "are to be used sparingly, and it is pleasing unto me that they should not be used, only in times of winter or of cold or famine." At the same time, liberal use of fruits and grains in the diet is prescribed and "early to bed and early to rise," is recommended.

For the observance of the commandment, the prophet promised health, "wisdom and great treasures of knowledge," and added: "And I, the Lord, give unto them a promise, that the destroying angel shall pass by them, as the children of Israel, and not slay them."

Observance of the centennial is expected to center in the campaign of the church against tobacco advertising and prohibition repeal.

HOOVER TO PRESIDE AT ARCHIVES RITES

Corner Stone of Building for Records Will Be Laid Tomorrow.

The Government's storehouse of records of permanent value will be dedicated tomorrow with impressive ceremonies. It is the Archives Building, and, although it will serve the purpose of a large filing cabinet, it will be of unusual beauty and will be in keeping with the architectural design and dignity of the other Government structures in the Triangle area. President Hoover will lay the corner stone, the exercises starting at 2:30 p. m.

The future home of Uncle Sam's old files and records is located between Seventh and Ninth streets, Pennsylvania avenue and Constitution avenue northwest. It will cost $8,750,000 and will be ready for occupancy in January, 1935. At the present time finishing touches are being completed on the framework.

The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, will pronounce the invocation at the corner stone laying. Secretary Ogden L. Mills will speak, after which President Hoover will deliver an address. Upon concluding his remarks the President will lay the stone. The playing of the national anthem and a benediction pronounced by the Most Rev. John M McNamara, Auxiliary Bishop of Baltimore, will conclude the exercises. The United States Marine Band will furnish the music and the United States Coast Guard will furnish a guard of honor.

Idle, With Nowhere to Go, Find Libraries Blessing

Books Relating to Problems of Modern Time Especially Called For; Base of Nation's Culture Broadened; 3,400 at Public Library Daily.

Books on monetary systems, farm relief, international debts and other problems of the times are enjoying a run of popularity at the Library of Congress.

Not only has the trend toward thoughtful reading increased, but the number of patrons has mounted steadily in the past year and a half, says Martin A. Roberts, superintendent of the reading room.

Before the depression it was considered a record day when 250 people visited the public reading room at the Library of Congress. Now 1,500 people sometimes get books there in one day.

While the urge to find solutions to the depression may cause many readers to select deep reading matter, Roberts does not hold the depression entirely responsible for the Nationwide trend toward increased use of libraries.

"There has been a remarkable development of libraries in the past few years—a broadening of the Nation's culture base—which would naturally bring an increase in the use of library facilities," he explains.

This imposing library, directly east of the Capitol between the Senate Office Building and the House Office Building, now contains more books than any other library in the world. Its total has passed the 4,500,000 mark.

Grace B. Finney, director of circulation in the Washington Public Library's central branch, sees a more direct effect of the depression upon reading habits. An average of 3,400 people visit that library daily, seeking culture, practical knowledge and recreation. This is a substantial increase over attendance in predepression times.

"This library," one old man is reported to have told Miss Finney, "is a blessing to people like myself who have no other place to go."

A frequent and embarrassing request at the Washington Public Library is for books on "How to make money at home."

When the bonus army called on the Capital, many of the marchers came to the library for war books, prewar books and lists of "places to see in Washington."

Books of games and fireside amusements have become extremely popular recently, since they provide the wherewithal for inexpensive entertainment.

ANIMAL GRAVEYARD PORTRAYS WILD LIFE 1,000 CENTURIES AGO

Carnegie Institution Makes Rich Find in California Asphalt Deposits.

SCIENCE RECONSTRUCTS MANY EXTINCT BEASTS

Huge Natural Trap Reveals Great Saber-Toothed Cat of Ancient Period.

By ROBERT F. WHITNEY.

How a great animal graveyard in California mirrors the "living past"—the pitiless struggle of great, strange and now extinct beasts—is described in a brochure just published by the Carnegie Institution of Washington.

In the asphalt deposits located within the City of Los Angeles, the interpretative eye of the scientist has discovered the details of a remarkable picture—a picture of the wild life that existed there 100,000 years ago.

During all these millenniums, even to the present day, oil has been seeping up from its hidden sources in the particular location in southern California and forming surface pools of a tarry substance, admirably suited to holding and engulfing inward animals chancing to set foot upon it.

To this natural animal trap, baited always with living creatures, were lured the great meat-eating beasts of the past. Chief among these were the saber-toothed cat and the great lion-like cat—felines larger and more formidable than the African lion or the Bengal tiger.

Bodies Reconstructed.

These beasts, snared in the tar, perished by the thousands, but the tar which caught them fast served also to preserve intact their bones, from which science now can reconstruct their great bodies and determine their characteristics.

The bone deposits are described as the greatest ever found in the world, and already more than 3,000,000 bones have been dug from the trap.

Not cats alone, but also skeletons of other animals rest in the asphalt—of elephants, mammoths, camels, mastodons, sloths as large as rhinoceroses, gigantic bears, great birds larger than any living, and of a multitude of other birds and beasts, entirely strange to those who know the most about the animal life of the world.

So well preserved are these specimens many of them speak eloquently of action and of accidents which occurred in the life of individuals.

A striking word-picture of the kind of story which these age-old records relate is given by Dr. John C. Merriam, president of the institution, in "The Living Past."

"Out of early excavations in the pool there came one day the skull of an ancient tiger with sabers broken and shattered to the roots. Instead of carrying death through the swift, sharp strokes of its sabers, the habits of life of this animal were changed. It was an old, emaciated, sunken-cheeked animal that left us this record of its last adventure, in which strength and skill and courage were inadequate."

The saber-toothed cats were not as fleet of foot as the present-day lions and tigers, but their limbs and muscles indicated greater strength and grasping power.

Their most striking feature is the extraordinary elongation of the upper canine teeth into what amounts to long thin sabers, with delicately serrated cutting edges, splendidly suited for stabbing and ripping of the flesh of victims.

In commenting upon indication of the manner of life of the saber-toothed cat, the authors of this study say that the destructive apparatus of the species is one of the most deadly combinations that have been found in any flesh-eating animal.

Living World of Past.

Because it was so highly specialized, like all delicate mechanism it frequently became disabled. Once the long thin sabers were broken this cat would lose its weapon in maintaining its position in the competitive life of the time.

In commenting on the picture presented through the great bone deposits, Dr. Merriam says:

"As the centuries passed, like a great procession streaming from the surrounding hills and plains, the birds and beasts swept into the blackness of these pools. Here was gathered a multitude of witnesses, who through the 'still lapse of ages' waited the time when in the unavoidable evidence of their reality they were to bring a living story of the past before us. They appear today not as formal revelation, but as clear evidence, which through this staying of the hand of destruction permits us to look into the living world of a past eon."

Building Program Urged to Aid Idle

Mallery Says States and Cities Should Follow Federal Example.

That most of the workers normally employed in the construction industry would have been at work during the past year if the States and municipalities had increased their public works by the same proportion as did the Federal Government, was the conclusion reached by Otto T. Mallery, of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce committee on unemployment, in a radio discussion last night with Dr. Isadore Lubin, of the Brookings Institution.

Emphasizing the need for a large public construction program as one of the possible measures for bringing recovery to American industry, Mr. Mallery recommended passage of the Wagner amendment to the Reconstruction Finance Corporation act, to permit loans to local units of government for public works.

Dr. Lubin estimated that if such funds were available more than $1,500,000,000 of construction would be put under way.

CORBETT MOURNED AS FATHER OF SCIENCE IN RING

Boxer Ended Rowdy Era Of Sport

Veterans Recall How He Introduced Footwork, Feinting.

Startled Ring World by Knocking Out Sullivan in '92.

By EDWARD J. NEIL.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18 (A.P.). The career of the prize ring's first master scientist, the fighter who helped most to lift the sport of boxing out of its rowdy bare-knuckle days, closed today with the death of James J. Corbett.

Probably as long as boxing lives and records last, his fame will rest chiefly on the fact that his was the right hand that rocked to sleep the great John L. Sullivan, the invincible strong boy of Boston, in the dirt of the Olympic Athletic Club in New Orleans on the night of September 7, 1892.

But to the old timers who saw him fight, to the countless friends he made all over the world after he had used the ability in his fists and legs as a stepping stone to stage fame, "Pompadour Jim" will rest on other laurels.

First of Scientific Boxers.

The veterans will remember him always as the first of all scientific boxers and the greatest; the man who introduced dazzling footwork, feinting, the fencing artistry of the left jab, and the advantages of a clean, brilliant mind, to the ring. He was the first "gentleman" fighter, the first to catch the imagination and hold the worship of the Nation's youngsters.

To the public of a later day he was the polished after-dinner speaker, a man of wit and knowledge. He became a popular stage figure, friend of John Drew, Richard Mansfield, and the Barrymores, and accomplished actor in his own right in such virile dramas of the late 90s as "After Dark," "Gentleman Jack," and even Bernard Shaw's "Cashel Bryon's Profession." He entertained from almost every vaudeville stage in the country at one time or another and made several triumphant European tours.

Corbett grew up in San Francisco, where he was born September 1, 1866. He turned to professional fighting at the age of 20 after tiring of his job as a bank teller. He fought Joe Choynski in his first big bout but the police stopped him and he had to go 28 rounds the next time to win. In 1891 he fought Peter Jackson, the great Negro boxer, to a draw in 61 rounds, a match still recalled as one of the finest fistic exhibitions of all times.

Like Fighting Ghost, Said Jackson.

In late years Jackson would shake his head as he talked of that match. "It was like fighting a ghost," he said. "He couldn't be hit by any one."

All this time one name alone blazed high in the fistic heavens, the name of John L. Sullivan, the bull of Boston, as deadly a right-hand puncher, as game a warrior, as ever lived. Sullivan was the king of the London prize realm. No man ever terrorized a fighting class, held it in such abject subjection, as did Sullivan during the years of his might. He appealed to the roughest, toughest, element in all sporting history.

But the slender Corbett, unimpressed, realized that dissipation was wearing down the great battler as no man could. He boxed Sullivan in a polite four-round exhibition in San Francisco, shortly after the Jackson draw. He decided he could whip the dread champion.

Aided and abetted by his shrewd manager, William A. Brady, of theatrical fame, Corbett set out to harrass Sullivan and force him into a finish fight. The controversy raged a year before the match was finally made.

They fought for a side bet of $10,000 and a $25,000 purse, the first heavyweight championship in history staged with 5-ounce gloves under the Marquis of Queensbury rules. Corbett weighed 187 pounds, a handsome figure of strength, proportion, cleanly youth. He was just 26 years old. Sullivan was 34, grossly fat, ill-trained.

Young Corbett Smashes Down Idol.

Ruthlessly young Corbett smashed down the idol, easily evading John L.'s mighty rushes that grew feeble as the battle raged on, battering him at will. Sullivan could scarcely see, scarcely move as the twenty-first round came up.

From an old sporting sheet comes this description of the twenty-first and final round:

"They came to the center of the ring. Sullivan was very tired; Corbett fresh and eager. Jim went after his man, and they came to close quarters. Corbett feinted with his left, apparently trying to get to the

Down the Years With "Gentleman Jim" Corbett

Corbett Outboxed Sullivan First in Dress-Suit Match

San Francisco, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Old-time San Franciscans recalled today many anecdotes in the early career of James J. Corbett. "Gentleman Jim" first gained the confidence he could beat John L. Sullivan when he outboxed the champion here June 26, 1891. They sparred in full dress suits, only exhibition in this garb being permitted at the time. A boxer had been killed in a private bout shortly before.

Sullivan arrived here on a tour of the country. He agreed to meet Corbett, then a young bank clerk. The benefit affair was held in the Grand Opera House. Corbett easily outboxed the champion.

After the bout Corbett remarked to friends: "So that's the great John L. I can lick him." A little more than a year later his assertion was borne out.

Tributes—

Paid Corbett by Jeffries, Dempsey, Tunney and Other Notables.

JIM JEFFRIES—Burbank, Calif., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Jim Jeffries, the man who beat Jim Corbett twice for the world's heavyweight championship, paused in his ranch duties today to say there never would be another like "Gentleman Jim."

"We had our little differences, like those two fights," said Jeffries, "but they were in good fun and he was a square shooter. Always, we were the best of friends, and he used to come in to see me at the ranch every time he was in Southern California.

"I want to express my deepest feelings to Mrs. Corbett. She was a worthy wife of a great champion."

JACK DEMPSEY—Los Angeles, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Visibly shaken by the death of Jim Corbett, Jack Dempsey, himself a former world's heavyweight boxing champion, said today: "He was a champion all by himself."

"The fight game," said Dempsey, "probably never will see another man like 'Gentleman Jim.' As a champion he was all by himself.

"As a gentleman, there was none finer. The fight game and the world at large has lost one of its greatest men. He was a dear friend of mine, and although I never had the pleasure of seeing him fight, I am convinced there never was a greater boxer."

"He was as fine a man as he was a boxer and I don't think any thing more can be said after that. We'll all miss him."

GENE TUNNEY—Chandler, Ariz., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Gene Tunney, who retired from the world's heavyweight boxing throne undefeated, said Jim Corbett was his inspiration in those years he battled to and defended the championship.

"A great figure has passed on," said Tunney, who is spending a winter vacation here with Mrs. Tunney.

"I mourn with the friends of sport and the personal friends of Jim Corbett. I have personally known Corbett since I began my boxing career and his personality has always been an inspiration to me.

"I am sorry about being so far from the scene of his death. I do wish I could have seen him once more before he passed on.

"Gentleman Jim without doubt had the greatest knowledge of boxing technique of any man ever in the American prize ring and in addition he was the most originally colorful figure ever to grace the ring."

TOM SHARKEY—San Francisco, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Sailor Tom Sharkey, who first gained ring fame by holding James J. Corbett to a four-round draw here in 1896, expressed keen grief today at the passing of the former champion.

"He was a grand man, always a gentleman and a real credit to boxing," said Sharkey. "He was the most clever man I ever fought. It seems like only yesterday that we were young fellows and it's hard to realize he has passed on."

JESS WILLARD—Hollywood, Calif., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—"They were just prize fighters before Corbett," Jess Willard, former heavyweight champion, said today.

"He put the game on a different basis—put science into box fighting," Willard said. "He did a great deal for the game and will be missed. Naturally I am sorry to hear of his death. He was in every sense of the word a gentleman."

Sarazen Shelves 8-Inch Cup Plan For 6-Inch Hole

Miami, Fla., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Gene Sarazen, British and American open golf champion, decided today he stretched the point when he proposed eight-inch putting cups for golf courses, and now he favors a six-inch cup.

His indorsement was accepted by the Miami Biltmore Club, where he is under winter contract, and as a result six-inch cups will be used in the $5,000 Florida Year 'Round Club's open tournament March 3, 4 and 5.

The Professional Golfers Association and the United States Golf Association objected to use of the larger cups, but sponsors decided they would proceed with the tournament as an experiment.

Sarazen played an 18-hole round today with Mike Brady, veteran pro from Mamaroneck, N. Y., each putting at eight-inch cups for nine holes, and then Sarazen admitted that was too big. He was steadfast, however, in his claim that the present cup is too small and suggested six inches as a compromise.

The crew will reach Paso Robles Wednesday.

Old Line Five Wins; Draw By Boxers

W. Maryland Loses on Court, 37-32, in Thriller.

Freshman Rule Forces Terrors to Default 2 Ring Bouts.

By BOB CONSIDINE.

AFTER Maryland U. basketers won from Western Maryland, 37 to 32, the Old Liners argued their way to a 4-4 draw with the undergraduate pugs of the same university last night at Ritchie Coliseum by diving into the Southern Conference books and excavating a freshman rule which, after a bit of heated verbiage among the respective officials, sidetracked two of the Terrors' chief nose busters, Bill Armacost, 125-pounder, and Tom Pontecarlo, the Golden Gloves' heavy, now being given a layer or two of learning at old Westminster.

In the six bouts that were contested, Western Maryland's sterling schnozzle smearers kicked the honk out of the Marylands, 4 to 2, but the two defaults went up on the blackboard as Old Line victories, and, although the ears of Coach Dick Harlow snapped with rage, they (the defaults) remained defaults.

Knockouts Are Divided.

The two kayos were divided. Harold Burns, Maryland's skinny, close-cropped brunette welter, bounced off the ropes like a rassler starting a flying tackle and pasted Western Maryland's Mr. Kiefer right on the button 1 minute and 25 seconds after the start of the fight.

Western Maryland came back spectacularly in the last bout of the night, when Capt. Bernie Kaplan, a tough young veteran, battered lanky Stewart McCaw into a splintered bamboo pole in the first round, and then rocked him to sleep with a stunning left that he brought up from the floor for 1 minute and 30 seconds of the second round.

The basket ball game was an accredited part of the double bill, but it was the mitt brandishing that some 3,000 villagers paid their buck for. So uniformly good were the two bouts and so haymaking were the two knockout blows delivered during the evening that even though placid Charley Short's honking horn voice tolled with the regularity of a fog horn, "folks, cut that there yellin'," the din kept up almost throughout the evening, the bourgeois being in a sort of revolutionary mode these miasmic days.

As for the bouts in which the botany battlers remained upright throughout, the standouts were the 115-pound flea weight epic, wherein Kale Mathias beat Maryland's Jimmy Young and Bernie Keener, captain of the locals, beat a peppery, sniffling, infighting kid whose somewhat bloody nose kept making a sound exactly like his name—Jack Olsh.

Snyder in Role of Hero.

Bob Snyder, a self-effacing sort of a guy, who has been playing third and fourth fiddle on Maryland's basket ball team all season, while the Vincents and Chases hit the headlines, gave Maryland its tongue-hanging victory in basket ball.

Western Maryland put a team of bulldog tenacity and about the same grace on the floor, but what it lacked in eclat it more than made up for in doggedness. The Terrors made a great

Bobsled Mark Twice Falls to J. H. Stevens

Lake Placid, N. Y., Feb. 18 (A.P.). The record for the mile and one-half dash down the side of Mount Hoevenberg was lowered again today when J. Hubert Stevens, holder of the Olympic, national and North American boblet titles, sent his Adirondack Club sled roaring down the winding trail in 1:47.79 to take a commanding lead in the North American four-man championships.

Stevens followed his record-breaking heat with a second run of 1:47.8, also better than the previous mark of 1:56 set by his brother, Curtis Stevens, in the national championships. The two record-smashing runs gave the boblet titleholder an aggregate time of 3:35.59. The final two heats will be raced tomorrow.

As in the two-man championships yesterday, the Stevens family finished one-two-three.

Navy Ringmen Are Upset By Virginia U. Team, 5-3

Middies Beaten Second Time in 14 Years in Feature of 15-Card Event; Goldstein Gets Decision.

Special to The Washington Post.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., Feb. 18.—A fighting troupe of boxers from the University of Virginia put a crimp into "Spike" Web's Naval Academy proteges tonight by winning a desperately contested series of bouts, here, by a score of 5 to 3. The Cavaliers were awarded four well-earned decisions, while Navy garnered two, and two were declared draws by Referee Ed Brockman, of Baltimore. A gallery of beteen 7,000 and 9,000, including about 800 Virginians and Washingtonians, watched the bouts.

It was only the second time in 14 years of collegiate fighting that the Tars have bowed to a foe. The other team to turn the trick was Syracuse. That was two years ago when the Orange took a hard contest, 4 to 3. Tonight's contest was the one hundred and second in which midshipmen teams have engaged in 14 years, and they now have to their credit 97 victories, 3 draws and 2 defeats.

Fourteen Other Events Decided.

Two of tonight's ring bouts went the way of technical knockouts. Midshipman Johnny McNaughton, 165-pounder and regarded as the class of the Navy team, was so badly battered by a rain of blows from the fists of Hiram Smith, when the latter pummeled him around the ring and into a corner, that the referee halted the contest after McNaughton was dizzy and bleeding freely from a bad gash in the nose. The bout had been under way 1 minute and 41 seconds. Slade Cutter, Navy heavyweight, was credited with the other K. O. when he floored Johnny Dawson for the count about midway of the third and final round.

But the class of boxing, as well as fighting, was shown in the lightweight bout, and notwithstanding collegiate rules against demonstrations during a contest, the big crowd went wild at times in the course of the battle between Bobby Goldstein, captain and lightweight, and Midshipman Hank Miller, one of the Navy's best, in which the veteran Virginian and national collegiate champion gained a clear verdict.

Goldstein Starts, Finishes Fast.

Bobby waded into the Middie from the start and twice in the opening round seemed to have him staggering. Miller came back strong in the second session, however, and probably gained a slight edge, but the cleverness of Goldstein easily gave him the verdict in the windup.

Navy got off to a good start when Capt. Archie Wright outpointed Archie Hahn in all three rounds of the bantamweight encounter. But Gordon Rainey, Virginia feather, evened the count by getting a close verdict over Jack Southerland. It was so close, in fact, that the bout swung away from the Tar because of the warnings by the referee of seemingly illegal punching.

The welterweight bout brought together two hard-hitting youngsters in Tommy Fishburne of Virginia and Midshipman R. H. Hopkins, an eleventh-hour Navy entry whom Webb substituted for Ken Nauman, in the hope of upsetting the Virginians. Both boys landed frequently to the face and body and there was little to choose between them. Of the two, Fishburne was the more finished boxer and displayed better ring generalship. This bout was declared a draw.

Another hoped for strategic move by Webb was sending Bobby Lee into the 155-pound division and moving McNaughton up to the 165-pound class. Lee was a whiz of a fighter

G. W. DOWNS ST. JOHN'S, 46 TO 22

Fenlon and Burgess in Star Roles; Colonials in New Uniforms.

GEORGE WASHINGTON UNIVERSITY closed its local basket ball season last night at the G street sports palace with a 46-22 victory over St. John's of Annapolis, its eighth consecutive triumph and fourteenth in 18 games. The Colonials will not compete again until Wednesday night when they participate in the New York City tournament.

Last night's victory constituted a personal triumph for Johnny Fenlon, squatty little forward who replaced Capt. Otts Zahn in the line-up. Fenlon covered himself with glory by his stellar work and received a tremendous ovation when relieved by Parrish. Zahn is still in the hospital recovering from a broken nose suffered in the Loyola game Wednesday night.

Together with Forrest Burgess, who snapped out of his recent slump, Fenlon shared the Colonial scoring honors. The pair contributed 18 points to the score. Carl MacCartee, former Tech High School athlete and now St. John's forward went them one better to garner the individual scoring honors.

MacCartee Gives Saints Lead.

It was MacCartee who staked the visitors to a lead immediately after the initial tap-off with a field goal and successful foul shot. Burgess evened matters with one of his inimitable fancy shots and a subsequent foul. From then on George Washington never lagged behind, although the first half nearly expired before it could get more than a half a pace ahead of the Bay City delegation.

St. John's never threatened after finishing the first half on the short end of a 21-10 score. G. W.'s fast-breaking attack paved the way for innumerable shots at the hoop.

The local outfit appeared for the first time in their natty new red, white and blue uniforms which looked to be the work of another Betsy Ross. The new suits and the old fervor proved to be the undoing of the visitors.

When the forwards slowed up a trifle near the end Wayne Chambers, husky Colonial guard, took up the burden and was industriously working the score up to 50 points when the official timekeeper blew taps.

NAGURSKI NOW WRESTLER.

Minneapolis, Minn., Feb. 18 (A.P.). Bronko Nagurski, of football fame, tucked a wrestling victory and a wrestling contract under his arm today and followed several other prominent gridders into the mat game.

His first victory came before he had officially become a mat man. He upset Tony Stecher, former wrestler, and now promoter here, in a brief engagement which was to test his strength.

Stecher signed Nagurski to meet Al Tajeson, of Minneapolis, in a one-fall match here Tuesday night.

MANDERS, GRID STAR, JAILED

Faribault, Minn., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Jack Manders, star University of Minnesota full back the last three seasons, was in jail today with his bail set at $100 on an assault charge. Hearing was set for Monday.

Harcy Riley, Minneapolis salesman, charged Manders struck him in a local restaurant Tuesday evening after both attended a dance.

"DOC" GREEN, EX-COACH, DIES AT 51

Former Western and St. Alban's Mentor Prominent Here.

GEORGE F. (DOC) GREEN, 51 long identified with sports in Washington, died yesterday at Garfield Hospital following an operation for an intestinal disorder. He had been ill about two weeks.

Mr. Green was known most prominently to Capital sports followers as coach of athletics at Western High School, where he directed activities in baseball, basket ball and track in 1923-24. Previously he had coached the National Cathedral School for Boys here, now known as St. Alban's, and was associated with the coaching staffs of Tome School and Princeton Prep.

A charter member of the Downtown Coaches Club, Mr. Green was a close follower of college and high school sports and big league baseball and is credited by Joe Judge with prolonging by several years the baseball career of the Washington first baseman, who took a course of calisthenics prescribed by Green which cured an ancient "Charley horse" in his leg.

Mr. Green was a graduate of the Temple University School of Physical Education in 1908 and devoted his career to that profession. In his later years he conducted a large summer camp for boys at Grand Rapids, Minn.

He was active in Masonry and was a Shriner. Mr. Green is survived by his mother. He lived at 2250 Hall place northwest.

Campbell Delays Auto Record Trial

Sir Malcolm Hopes to Make Attempt Tomorrow Morning.

Daytona Beach, Fla., Feb. 18 (A.P.). A definite decision not to attempt a test or record run tomorrow was reached today by Sir Malcolm Campbell, British racer, following upon an inspection of the 9-mile beach racing strip. Sir Malcolm said beach conditions and winds were not favorable.

The Briton declined to make an announcement but it appeared likely he would make a test run and maybe a record run Monday morning at low tide which occurs at 10:19 o'clock. However, the beach and wind will govern his decision.

Campbell is still waiting to test his Bluebird, following adjustments which took mechanics four days to complete. They lowered the gear ratio of the car in an effort to aid the machine to gain speed rapidly at the start and overcome a wet beach.

The Bluebird is prepared to run at Campbell's command, and racing officials have notified the Britisher they will have timing apparatus in place Monday in the event he chooses to make an assault on the world record of 253 miles an hour, which he established here last year.

V. P. I. Wins Overtime Game as Hall Stars

Lexington, Va., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Bus Hall's field goal in an extra period gave the Virginia Poly Basket Ball Team a 37-to-35 victory over the Washington and Lee quint here tonight.

The victory was the Techmen's second triumph of the season over Washington and Lee.

Hall's shot was the only field goal made during the extra period of play that was made necessary when the teams ended the regulation period deadlocked at 35-all.

Cunningham Baxter Mile Winner

Venzke Again Beaten by Kansas Boy in Last-Lap Drive.

Siegel Stops Toppino; Kelly, G. U., Third, Widmyer Fourth.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18 (A.P.). Glenn Cunningham, of the University of Kansas, again raced to victory over Gene Venzke, world indoor record holder, tonight in a revival of their mile rivalry, defeating the Pennsylvania flier by 10 yards in the classic Baxter mile, feature event of the annual New York Athletic Club indoor track and field games.

The time was 4 minutes 14.3 seconds, 1.3 seconds slower than Cunningham's time in winning the Wanamaker mile from Venzke in the Millrose games two weeks ago.

It was in the Baxter mile last year that Venzke raced to his world indoor record of 4:10, the fastest mile ever run by an American, but he was no match for the sturdy Kansan tonight. The two had laid behind the pack, although well up, until two laps from home. There Venzke jumped into the lead with Cunningham in close pursuit and they ran stride-for-stride for almost a lap and a half of the track. Coming down the back stretch Cunningham sprinted, went into the lead and pulled steadily away until he broke the tape a full 10 yards in front.

Lermond, Pace-Setter, Is Third.

Leo Lermond, the Boston strong boy who set the pace for part of the distance, finished third 15 or 20 yards behind Venzke, with Carl Coan, of Pennsylvania, fourth, Frank Crowley, fifth, and Ericny, Swedish Olympian, a badly distanced last.

Ed Siegel, husky sprinter of the Swedish-American A. C., New York, won the 60 yard dash to give Emmett Toppino, of New Orleans, his first defeat indoors.

Toppino finished a foot behind the fast-traveling New Yorker, with Al Kelly, of Georgetown, a step back and Earl Widmyer, of Maryland, just behind him. The time of 6.3 seconds was the same as that in which Toppino won his semifinal heat.

James Bausch, of the Kansas City Athletic Club, Olympic decathlon champion and world record holder, failed to win a first place in his Eastern indoor debut, but amassed glory enough with a second place in the shot put and a tie for third in the pole vault.

Bausch finished second to Leo Sexton, Olympic champion and world record holder, in the shot put with a throw of 49 feet 1 inch, as compared to Sexton's 50 feet 6 1-32 inches. Big Jim vaulted 13 feet for his third-place tie in the pole vault, which was won by Keith Brown of Yale, at 13 feet 9 inches.

Percy Beard, elongated Alabama schoolmaster, came up with the only record-equalling effort of the evening, racing over the 60-yard high hurdles in both his heat and the final in 7.4 seconds, which tied the mark set by R. G. Haskins, at Chicago, way back in 1911.

EASTERN STABLES DOMINATE KENTUCKY DERBY LIST OF 118

33 Geldings, 5 Fillies Named

Ladysman, Caterwaul, Repaid, Head Play Among Favorites.

35 Still Are Maidens; Golden Way Missing From List.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—One hundred and eighteen of the finest 3-year-olds were named today to compete May 6 in America's premier turf event, the Kentucky Derby.

Announcement of the nominations, the first harbinger of spring in the Blue Grass country, was made by Col. M. J. Winn, executive director of Churchilll Downs. It showed that 80 colts, 33 geldings and 5 fillies, representing practically every worth-while young thoroughbred in the country, will be eligible to race for the $50,000 added purse and the fame that first came to Aristides, the "little red hoss" of 58 years ago.

Canada Names Tractable.

Eastern stables, led by those in New York, dominate the list for the fifty-ninth running of the Derby that annually attracts thousands from all over the country. However, there are entries from other States, from Virginia to Tennesse, to California and Texas, and one foreign entry, Tractable, a chestnut gelding from the Hastings Stable in Canada. Only one imported racer, Omar Khayyam, in 1917, ever won the Derby, and this year's list carries, aside from Tractable, only one imported racer, Knockaway, one of the three nominations of W. E. Smith.

Among the prime favorites this far ahead of Derby day are the winter book favorite from W. R. Coe's stable, Ladysman, speedy son of Pompey, which made an unsuccessful effort to win the Derby in 1926; C. V. Whitney's Caterwaul; Mrs. Payne Whitney's Dynastic; Mrs. W. Crump's Head Play; Lee Rosenberg's Kerry Patch, which defeated Ladysman in the Futurity at Belmont last year; Repaid, from James F. Johnson's Quincy stable, which subsequently defeated Kerry Patch and Caterwaul in the Junior Champion Stakes at Aqueduct.

Bradley Lists Two Hopefuls.

E. R. Bradley's Boilermaker and Beefsteak also are among the highly regarded eligibles along with The Darb, Projectile, Sarada, Swivel, Poppyman and Crowning Glory, the latter two named by Mrs. J. H. Whitney.

Of the 118 named, 35 still are maidens; 12 for one reason or another did not start as 2-year-olds. The other 71 faced the barrier 1,073 times as juveniles to win 208 firsts, 145 seconds and 141 thirds for an aggregate purse of $683,773.

Among the few thoroughbreds that showed form as 2-year-olds and were not named for the Derby were Barnswallow, Character, Golden Way, Happy Gal and Sun Archer.

DARTLE WINS FEATURE AT HIALEAH

Chinese Custom Second, Nosing Out Collateral.

HIALEAH PARK, Miami, Fla., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The Everglade Stable's Dartle, a brown colt by Dodge—On Time, raced to a commanding victory in the Nursery Stakes No. 1, for the 2-year-olds colts and geldings, at three furlongs before a crowd of fifteen thousand at the Miami Jockey Club's track here this afternoon.

He took command at the break and never was headed, winning by four lengths, with Chinese Custom taking the place by a nose from Collateral. The time was 34 1-5. The race, the first stake for 2-year-olds of the meeting, was worth $2,240 to the winner. The victory completed a double for the Everglade Stable, Opinion having won the second event. Dartle was an odds-on favorite, paying $3.60 straight and was ridden by Buddy Hanford.

Kincsen Finishes Fast To Score.

Mrs. P. A. Carreaud's Kincsen, winner of the O'Hara-Bryan Handicap at Bowie last fall, raced to a thrilling victory in the Twenty Grand Handicap at one mile, the other feature of the card. Outrun for half a mile, she came through the bunch with a sensational rush to win by a length, while My Dandy took the place by a nose from Gold Step, with Mountain Elk a nose behind. The time was 1:36 4-5. Kincsen paid $10.30 straight. Gold Step and My Dandy fought it out in front to the stretch.

The Everglade Stable's Opinion won a nose finish with Pot au Brooms while Coat Tails, the heavily played favorite was third, a neck behind, in the Safety Harbor Purse for 3-year-olds at 7 furlongs. Coat Tails was third. The time was 1:24 4-5. Pre War and Opinion made the early running, while Coat Tails was slow to get going. The winner paid $11.30.

Con Amore Is Victor By a Head.

The time was 1:11 1-5, the fastest 6 furlongs of the meeting. Con Amore made the early running, then Mr. Sponge took the lead, but the mare came on again in the stretch drive. The winner paid $8.00.

Billy Champ won the closing event at a mile and three-sixteenths on the turf with Mike Hall second and Brass Monkey third. The time was 1:57 4-5.

CELTICS FIVE PLAYS HERE THURSDAY

Ex-World's Champs Guests of Aero Eagle Five.

FOUR members of the Original New York Celtics, Joe Lapchick, Dutch Dehnert, Pete Barry and Dave Banks, will appear here Thursday night when that team invades for a game with the Aero Eagles at Tech High School. Ranked at the top of the list at the apex of their long and colorful campaign on the court, the Celtics have lost little, if any, of their old cunning.

True, age has slowed their steps a trifle, but the old eye for the basket remains and indications are that the local outfit will have its hands full Thursday night.

Hickey, Herliky Complete Quintet.

Nat Hickey, formerly of Cleveland, and Pat Herlihy, who won his spurs with the Brooklyn Visitations a few years back, are included on the team's roster.

Aside from their regularly scheduled games in the defunct American League when they opposed George Marshall's Laundrymen, the Celtics sometimes visited for games with independent pro teams. Some years ago, they played the Washington Yankees off their feet in a game at the Coliseum.

With Joe Sweeney, Bozie Berger, Tubba Parrell, Moon Evans and Joe Croson in the line-up, the Eagles will be prepared to offer the invaders a real battle. A preliminary game will precede the main attraction, which will start at 8:30 o'clock.

Washington Gun Club Field Led by Shelton

H. H. Shelton was high gun at the regular Saturday afternoon shoot of the Washington Gun Club, held yesterday at the club's Benning traps, shattering 94 targets in 100. E. H. Hartge, a visitor to the club, broke the first 50 straight, but was ineligible for trophies. Shelton fired 50 targets at a handicap distance of 20 yards.

L. L. Lane tied with Shelton for the trophy on the first 50, Shelton winning the toss-up. Five gunners tied for the added trophy, J. Marcey, R. P. Livesey, Dr. A. V. Parsons, T. C. Pearce, and W. E. Saxton.

Original Celtic

DAVE BANKS,

Capital Dog Lovers Prepare for Show

Kennel Club Will Stage Event at Auditorium April 21 and 22.

Plans are already going forward for the most ambitious dog show ever attempted by the National Capital Kennel Club, to be held at the Washington Auditorium April 21 and 22 with all proceeds to be given the Shriner's nonsectarian crippled children relief work.

The fact that the show is expected to find Washington knee deep in Japanese cherry blossoms is certain to increase the number of exhibitors. It is also well known through dogdom that the President-to-be, Franklin D. Roosevelt, is exceptionally interested in the doings of the canine world and probably will be among the thousands of spectators who annually parade up and down the aisles viewing the princes and princesses of the bow-wows. Exhibitors will be presented at the White House.

Fifty-six champions took part in the parade of champions last year, the blue ribbon of which fell to an English setter, imported, one of the Markable strain. The year before the title of king of the show was bestowed upon Blue Dan, of Happy Hollow.

Turner and Kiatta On Community Card

Joe Turner will wrestle George Kiatta in the feature bout of a card to be presented at the Southeast Community Center's athletic carnival to be held Saturday, February 25, in the auditorium of Hine Junior High School.

An interesting program, including tumbling, illuminated Indian club swinging, fancy rope skipping, tight rope walking and other stunts has been arranged. The Holy Comforter Boys Band will furnish music for the occasion.

DEPART. LEAGUE DANCE.

With the end in view of raising money to buy trophies and carry on the league, the U. S. Departmental Basket Ball League will hold a dance at the Y. M. C. A. Friday night at 9:30 o'clock. Tickets may be purchased from W. I. Koontz, room 809, Civil Service Building.

TURNER CARD MARKED BY QUALITY

Garibaldi - Judson in Feature of Attractive Matfest.

ONE of the most imposing arrays of journeymen rasslers ever corraled by Promoter Joe Turner and ordered to leer upon one another will strut their suet at the Washington Auditorium next Thursday night. The program of five growlfests is headed by a bit of bonebending by Masters Gino Garibaldi and Frank Judson.

Paul Jones, whose stock dropped a notch or two when he was dumped by Fred Grobmier in an exciting scissors spectacle last week, is back in the scramble again, meeting this time Joe Savoldi, reformed Notre Dame gridman.

Grobmier trades a hook scissors or so with a newcomer, somebody named Bruno Gorasini. This bout has been listed as the semiwindup, and will be permitted to roam for 45 minutes.

Garibaldi Occupies Lofty Position.

Garibaldi was the big local buildup of last summer, although his position in the rassling world; that is, his honest ability, doesn't need any particular recourse to politics to put him in a good light. He is one of the strongest men in sport, lithe, as hard to hold as a fist of quicksilver, and a genuine all-around good wrestler. He knows about four times as much about rassling and wrestling as does Judson, his opponent, but the latter has a way of winning bouts here in Washington.

Joe Holman, the mastodon of ceremonies, who ballyhooes the matmen and translates grunts into workable English, announced yesterday that Gorasini had told him that he has devised a method of breaking Grobmier's deadly "Japanese Frog Scissors."

Whitney Jumper Wins in England

"Pete" Bostwick Pilots Dusty Foot; Grand National Threat.

Sandown, England, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Hopes for an American victory in the Grand National at Aintree, March 24, were bolstered today when George H. (Pete) Bostwick, wealthy United States amateur jockey, rode John Hay Whitney's Dusty Foot to victory in the Open Hunters Steeplechase.

Young Bostwick, generally rated as the leading amateur steeplechase rider of the world, gave the 9-year-old American-owned jumper a great ride to bring him home with four lengths to spare over R. Petres' Plaster of Paris. The race covered about 2½ miles, and was worth £200.

Dusty Foot, which has been assigned 147 pounds for the Grand National, was well regarded prior to the 1932 renewal of the famous steeplechase, but refused to jump on the day of the race.

Another American-owned Grand National nominee, Theras, carrying the silks of Jesse Metcalf, of South Carolina, finished second in the Grand International Steeplechase—a 3 5-8-mile race, which attracted seven Grand National candidates, including Forbra, last year's winner.

Theras, an 8-year-old chestnut gelding, with an assignment of 150 pounds for the Grand National, finished eight lengths back of Mrs. B. V. Davis' Pelorus Jack. Forba went unplaced.

In Home-Coming

REDS BARRY,
Capital heavyweight hope who has made good in metropolitan fistic circles, returns to the scenes of his early bouts at Portner's Arena Tuesday night to meet Les Kennedy, conqueror of Bob Godwin, who defeated Barry last Summer.

BOXING BITS Hereabouts

JOHNNY RISKO, Cleveland's in-and-out fighter, conqueror of Jack Sharkey, Jack Delaney, Paul Berlenbach, Max Baer and numerous other outstanding heavyweights, will be down at Portner's before long swapping punches with some of our talented local boys.

Danny Dunn, Risko's manager, has been in communication with Promoter Frankie Mann with respect to bringing the Ohio Baker Boy to Portner's. Dunn informs Mann that Risko is starting a comeback campaign that he hopes will bring him back to the top ranks he occupied a few years ago.

Risko always has been a stiff puncher, and those who have seen him in action declare that he is a great crowd pleaser.

Indications are that Risko may meet the winner of the Kennedy-Barry fight some time in March. Kennedy recently stated that he would "love to meet Risko." The Montanan has beaten some of the men Risko has taken in tow.

Heavies are having their fling at Portner's. If the bout between Bob Tow and Marty Gallagher materializes, fight fans will be witnessing two feature heavyweight bouts within the space of two weeks. Tow, greatly improved since he came under Jimmy Erwin's management, already has dusted the Foggy Bottom pride for a decision. A stablemate of Kennedy, he has been anxious to meet Gallagher ever since he saw his towering comrade lose the decision to the District heavyweight.

If Tow gets by Gallagher, he may get a shot at Risko—maybe Barry, provided Mr. Mushky Jackson would consent.

Now that Pete Sarron, Birmingham, Ala., featherweight sensation, has convinced fans that he is a first-class fighter, Matchmaker Frankie Mann should bring down a good man from the North to meet him.

Sarron, possessing a deadly left, completely outclassed Frankie De-Angelo. There are a number of fighters who probably would make a good match for Sarron. Pete Sanstol, Norwegian champion, is one and Jimmy Mack, the Philadelphia speedster, is another. Eddie Buri, it is understood, has turned "thumbs down" on a match with Sarron.

Benny Schwartz, who already has felt the sting of Sarron's leather, and who describes the Southern champion's work in the ring as that of "perpetual motion," may be brought in to fight him again. Schwartz is the owner of a potent left. So is Sarron.

Erwin, who has taken over the managing of Sarron, says that he expects to make a trip to New York soon to confer with Madison Square Garden officials about booking future bouts there for the Dixie champion.

"Sarron has the stuff to make good in the Garden," Erwin declared. "He's too good for anything down this way."

"Moose" Butch, Pittsburgh's crack featherweight, is seeking fights around this way, as is Ross Fields, of Cleveland.

Boxing, which has not been going over so well in Baltimore, will be served up again tomorrow night when Joe Dundee, former welterweight champion, assisted by Eddie Ross, will offer another weekly fistic card at the 104th Regiment Armory. Ross, formerly with Max Waxman, is in the role of promoter. During Dundee's days as a fighter, Ross was Dundee's chief second adviser.

Heading the program tomorrow night is Joey Goodman, Richmond, Va., junior welterweight, who will be pitted against Lew Raymond, Ray Bowen's recent conqueror. Goodman recently placed himself under "Dutch" Irwin's management. Goodman's only stand at Portner's saw him defeat K. O. Tony Stetz, southpaw from Wilkes-Barre, Pa.

Patsy Donovan tells us that at the recent Hans Birkie-Red Barry fight in New York, Jimmy Johnston and Billy McCarney almost came to blows. McCarney, according to Patsy, accused Johnston of talking to the timekeeper. McCarney is affiliated with Joe Jacobs in the handling of Max Schmeling. Donovan states that the New York papers claim that Barry was made the goat in the Johnston-Jacobs feud.

Mushky Jackson, handling Barry under contract with Patsy Donovan, also is connected with the McCarney-Jacobs stable. Jackson trained both Schmeling and Canzoneri.

POT-POURRI—Red Busch, Cumberland middleweight, who made a great fight with Ray Swanson at Twin City last summer, is going good around Pittsburgh . . . they were calling Ray Bowen "Andy," thinking it was his brother, in his last bout in Baltimore . . . at the age of 18 Red Barry fought a ten-round main bout against Buster Newberry, Carolina heavyweight champion, at Roanoke, Va. . . . it was a draw . . . Jimmy Erwin picked up Joe Fino in Mexico City after Fino's father had been killed as a member of Pancho Villa's gang . . . Young Van's victory over Kirkwood was no surprise to Van, himself . . . a week before the fight he said he was confident he could take him.

KENNEDY AND BARRY AT PORTNER'S

Capital Youth Comes Home With Punch, Say Handlers.

WHAT looms as the outstanding bout of the indoor ring season will be served local patrons of punch Tuesday night at Portner's Arena when Reds Barry climbs into the ring with Les Kennedy. The pair will argue 10 rounds or less. It will be Barry's first appearance before a local audience in six months. In the interval he has made rapid progress under the direction of "Mushky" Jackson in New York.

Barry last fought before a hometown gathering at Twin-City Arena last summer when he won a decision over Eddie Houghton. Immediately after, he was shipped to New York. Numbered among the redhead's victims are Izzy Gastanaga, Jack McCarthy, Justin Sirutis, Arthur Huttick and Frankie Sims. New York fight experts have been impressed by the youngster's improvement and predict a bright future for him in the heavyweight ranks.

Kennedy Is Rugged Opponent.

In Kennedy, Barry will meet a big, rugged battler, well versed in ring science, who will keep Messrs. Jackson, Donovan and Cornell's protege on the move from the opening gong. Kennedy holds a decision over Bob Godwin, who in turn gained the verdict over Barry in a pair of bouts.

The local populace is interested more or less in witnessing Barry's new-found punch. Diligent training under Jackson's expert direction, plus added strength which maturity naturally brings, have given the lad a real K. O. punch, according to his trainer. Jackson points to his victory over Gastanaga, in which he gave the Spaniard a terrific thumping in the midsection, as evidence of this.

With bouts awaiting him in other cities, Barry can not afford to lose Tuesday night.

Ray Bowen and Buster Brown will mix in the semifinal bout on Tuesday's card, a standout attraction in itself. The winner gets a crack at Joey Goodman. Bowen is anxious to top Brown, inasmuch as it means a return bout with Lew Raymond, who stopped him in a recent scrap.

Other preliminaries are Roy Manley vs. George Esrick, six rounds; Cary Wright vs. Benny Toothman, four rounds; Jimmy De Capua vs. Young Fundelin, four rounds.

Col. Hatfield Winner Of $1,500 Derby Trial

New Orleans, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Col. Hatfield, with Jockey C. Meyer up, today won the $1,500 Derby Trial Handicap over a mile at the Fair Grounds. Eisenberg was second and Spicson third.

The field of ten 3-year-olds started. Colonel Hatfield covered the mile in 1:44 and paid $11.60 to win, $4.80 place and $3 show on $2 certificates. Eisenberg paid $3.80 place and $2.80 show and Spicson, the favorite, $2.80 show.

Fortunate Youth Wins In Havana Sprint

Havana, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—S. S. Friedlein's Fortunate Youth, closing with a tremendous burst of speed, today defeated a small but classy field of Cuban grand national candidates in the six-furlong feature at Oriental Park.

Ridden by Hank Louman, who yesterday scored with four of his five mounts, the 6-year-old son of Lucky Hour came from off the pace to win in a drive. Arthur Hullcoat's Proteus, which once raced for A. C. Bostwick, set the early pace but wound up second, unable to stave off Fortunate Youth's great stretch challenge. Mrs. Emil Denemark's Veteran, Pigeon Hole was third. Malolo and Hoops completed the field.

In winning Fortunate Youth ran the fastest three-quarters of the meeting, stepping the distance in 1:11 1-5 under 110 pounds. He paid 3 to 1.

RAMEY-JADICK IDLE.

Grand Rapids, Mich., Feb. 18 (A.P.). Indefinite postponement of the 10-round bout between Wesley Ramey, of Grand Rapids, and Johnny Jadick, of Philadelphia, junior welterweights, was announced today. E. W. Dickerson, promoter, blamed the Michigan bank holiday for calling off the bout, which had been scheduled for February 25.

NATS' VANGUARD STARTS TO CONVERGE ON BILOXI TUESDAY

Camp on Gulf Objective of Travelers

Griffith Is on Scene, Cronin En Route From Coast.

Batterymen and Kerr Form First Group to Report.

By BOB CONSIDINE.

LIKE the tentacles of one of the lobsters for which it is noted, the sleepy village of Biloxi, Miss., is stretching out over the East and Midwest and plucking from their winter hibernation the advance guard of the 1933 Washington Baseball Club.

A score of pitchers and catchers, rookies and graybeards, are being grabbed by the hypothetical seats of their pants, torn from their winter of whittling and lassitude and started on their separate ways to the Queen City of the Smelt Coast. Dean Clark Griffith and his faculty, Manager Joe Cronin, will open the spring semester Wednesday morning at 10 o'clock.

Cronin En Route From Coast.

Griffith has been in Biloxi for a week or so, watching a steady drizzle and looking askance at the nervous chamber of commerce, which had promised year-round sunshine. Joe Cronin, embarked on perhaps the most significant journey of his young and glorious career in baseball, left San Francisco yesterday.

The local trainload leaves Tuesday afternoon at 1:35 with a handful of the blue-shirted boys; namely, Moe Berg, who will come here from Newark that morning; Johnny Kerr, the utility infielder whom Joe Cronin has ordered to Biloxi ahead of time to keep the batteries charged; Luther Thomas, the rookie from whom everybody is expecting too much, and a couple of gents named Nick Altrock and Al Shacht. Shacht hasn't signed up for 1933, but nobody seems very worried over it. Al probbaly is waiting for a dull day on the sports pages.

Crowder and Bolton To Swing On.

The choo-choo comes to a squeaky stop at Winston-Salem to pick up Al Crowder, dean of the pitching staff, while at High Point, N. C., Cliff Bolton, rookie catcher, will be placed on a mail-sack catapult and shot into the baggage car. Otherwise the boys will come from the four corners of the country east of the Mississippi. For instance:

Luke Sewell, from Akron; Monte Weaver from some whistle stop in North Carolina; Ed Linke from Chicago; a cub pitcher named Ellsworth Hazzard, from Chicago; Bob Friedrichs, pitcher, from Cincinnati; Billy Burke from Joliet (sounds like an amnesty act); Bill McAfee, from Chicago; Earl Whitehill, from the sulphuric depths of Hot Springs, Ark.; Walter Stewart, from Crosswell, Tenn.; Jack Russell, from Sarasota, Fla., and Al Thomas, from Baltimore by way of Chicago, where he has a light of love. A kid named Speed Burrows, 22 years old, a college pitcher from Idaho, also will report Wednesday, but he's paying his own expenses. Mike Martin and Frankie Baxter, the hall room boys, left yesterday.

The bulk of the team reports March 5, and wastes no time about choosing up sides, for Atlanta will be played at Mobile the following Saturday. On March 1, Washington's unpolished diamond, big and gangling Cecil Travis, rookie third baseman, reports.

Joe Cronin has written enough letters to Johnny Kerr here this winter to convince Johnny that the pitchers and catchers will be in for a seige of work the moment school opens. He's going to make them, among other things, take more batting practice. He plans to hasten their rounding into form, with the exception of Al Thomas, whose reinforced arm will not labor past canter speed at least March 15.

Clark Griffith has done a masterful job with the problem of getting the boys into the fold without a great deal of argument, despite the fact that the financial scissors had clipped many a cipher off the ends of their fat salaries. Griffith, who always was a good hitter, is batting something like .999 in the contractural league, the only mark against him being Heinie Manush, who still remains obdurate as Hades about signifying his intention of wearing the left-field sunglasses this season.

Other than Manush everything looms lovely on the spring training horizon. The chambermaids at the new Biloxi hotel are dusting up and having permanent waves. The chef is teaching a new squad of waiters how to place their thumbs in the soup in the approved Washingtonian manner, and the Washington Baseball Club stockholders are about to see something like $50,000 spent partially to reduce the composite waistline of the club and the remainder as a gift at the feet of the great American god Ballyhoo.

Episcopal Defeats Western, 26 to 24

Special to The Washington Post.

Alexandria, Va., Feb. 18.—Episcopal High School defeated Western High School, 26 to 24, in a well-played game here today. It was the team's first meeting on the court this season.

With MacPherson directing its attack, Western went ahead, 15 to 13, in the first half, but Episcopal came back fighting in the last two periods and wiped out this advantage, assuming the lead near the end. Fishburn and Woodruff were outstanding for the winners.

Hoyas Skid in League Race Despite Last-Half Threat.

Special to The Washington Post.

PITTSBURGH, Pa., Feb. 18.—Carnegie Tech took undisputed possession of second place in the Intercollegiate Basket Ball Conference by handing Georgetown a 32-to-27 setback in the Tech gymnasium tonight before several hundred fans. The victory was the third for the Skibos in league competition, against one defeat, and Georgetown's fourth loss, against only one win. It also gave the Tartans five triumphs and five defeats for the campaign.

From the time Bob Smith drove a field goal into the basket in the opening minute of play, the Skibos were never behind, although tied twice in the first half by the Hoyas. The game was a tedious exhibition, although the final half went much faster than the first 20 minutes of play.

Georgetown Trails, 23-16, at Half.

Tech went into a 11 to 3 lead, saw Georgetown pull up to an 11 to 11 tie, again at 13 to 13 and then the Plaid got going for a 23 to 16 margin at the half. Bob Smith's four field goals and a foul for 9 points—all the scoring he did during the game—helped the Tech cause in the first period.

With five minutes to go Georgetown tossed a scare into the Technites when Hargaden connected for a field goal underneath the hoop to make the score 28 to 24. Carolan landed a foul, bringing the Hoyas only three points in arrears. Conners' free throw made it 28 to 26, but Ted Rigg made it 30 to 26 with a pair of fouls. Ewart dashed under the basket for a field goal with a minute to go to clinch the game.

stand near the end. After Vincent had launched the Old Liners into a 30-to-22 lead with five minutes to go, Bergo and Hurley began spearing some of those mile-long Maryland passes deep in their own territory and bringing them down the floor, using a flying wedge. The score bounced up on even terms at 30-30.

In the meantime, this Snyder guy was getting a terrific case of hot hands. He broke the deadlock with a perfect pot from far on the side, for 32-30, and followed it up with one of the best recovery shots of the season. He had overrun the basket in a bruising dribble, but, arching his back into a quarter moon, he reached back into the court and flipped one in, one-handed. Then he put in a cut and dried snowbird, and it was 36-30, and all over except a couple of squeaky "locomotives" from the Maryland stands.

A. A. U. PLAY MAY DRAW 100 TEAMS

Officials Are Mailing Cards; Tourney to Open March 2.

MORE than 300 membership cards in the District A. A. U., or approximately half the number to be issued, were placed in the mails last night, their destination the homes of as many boys who plan to compete in the mammoth basket ball tournament, sponsored by The Post, which opens March 2, at Tech High School. In making the announcement, Charles M. Fyfe, chairman of the registration committee, stated that the remainder would be mailed as soon as possible.

Meanwhile, team entry blanks continued to be received at the sports department of The Post at such a rate as to lead officials in charge of the tournament to believe the goal of 100 will be attained at an early date. All entries must be submitted before midnight, February 23.

In order to speed up filing of the entry blanks Fyfe has decided to permit teams to file their entry blanks immediately, although all members of the same have not received their registration cards and thus will be unable to include their registry number as required on the form. Entries accepted in this manner will be checked at a later date and player numbers inserted by the committee.

Although no date has been set for weighing-in ceremonies, it is believed that this will be done immediately after the closing date for entries, or February 24 and 25. The schedule will be announced as soon after as possible.

Reiss and Lambert Battle To Draw.

Cutter, Navy heavyweight, outpointed Dawson and finally sent a blow to the jaw in the third round from which the Virginian could not recover before the 10 count.

Everything Foes in Indian Ball, Capital's Attraction on March 3

A GAME so old that its origin is lost in antiquity along with domestic quarrels and toe-stubbing, will be exhibited for the first time in Washington a week from next Friday, March 3 to be exact, at Central High School Stadium. It is Indian ball, to be played by two Cherokee teams from the North Carolina reservation of the tribe.

Indian ball is the progenitor of modern lacrosse, but infinitely rougher and lacking in team play. It is definitely a game wherein everything goes, and it encourages hitting in the clinches. It is played with long sticks, on the end of which is a loose-strung basket arrangement which serves to trap a little black ball.

The purpose, of course, is to advance the ball down the field toward the goal, formed by a couple of Indians holding up two saplings. There are no particular rules about the number of players to be used by each team, just as long as they are equal.

Impromptu fisticuffs are said to mark every moment of the game.

As a preliminary two modern lacrosse teams, culled from some of the best college players every developed in America, will play the game as it is presented today.

The afternoon of activity in Central's big bowl, which seats close to 8,000, is the only sports program slated by the inaugural committee on entertainment. All proceeds will go to charity. Under the system of selling tickets for the event seats are now priced at $1 and also at 50 cents until Friday, after which they will jump to $1.25 and 60 cents. Seats on sale at Spalding's, the Inaugural Ticket Office, and downtown hotels.

1932 Gave Weaver to Nats As Johnson Ended 4-Year Term, Club Finishing Third

(Herewith is the twenty-second of a series of articles in conjunction with The Post's baseball contest.)

By FRANK H. YOUNG.

ALTHOUGH the Nationals finished in the money in 1932 for the ninth time out of the last ten seasons, coming in third after losing the runner-up position by a game to the Athletics in the final series of the season, President Clark Griffith felt that it was to the best interest of the club to make a managerial change. Thus Walter Johnson ended a second baseball career here. In 1927, a broken leg caused finis to be written to one of the most brilliant pitching records in the national game, while it was a series of bad breaks in general that caused the end of his four-year term as a team leader.

In baseball, a team either wins the pennant—and everything is lovely—or it does not— and then usually it's just too bad for the manager. And so it was in the case of Johnson. As a matter of fact, it is the writer's opinion that last year's Nats simply did not have the class to beat out the Yankees, who brought home the gonfalon by a margin of 13 games, and who then followed through with another four-straight-game victory over the Chicago Cubs, giving them a record of twelve successive world's series victories.

Weaver and Crowder Pitching Mainstays.

Monte Weaver, in his first full season as a regular, won 22 games while losing 10, setting a new record for a "Freshman" pitcher, and "General" Alvin Crowder turned in 26 victories—the most in the league—as against 13 losses, but other than this pair, the mound staff was in and out—mostly out. Lloyd Brown won 15 and lost 10, but was most inconsistent, while Fred Marberry, although having a record of 8 and 4, was even less dependable.

Carl Fischer was no help at all, finally being traded to the Browns for Dick Coffman, who was not even as good, while Alphonse (Tommy) Thomas, brought from the White Sox, began showing rare form only to injure his flinging arm and to be lost to the team for the last six weeks or more.

The Nats finished fourth in batting and trailed the leading Athletics in fielding by a single point. Heinie Manush led the home clan with the willow with a .342 average, the others who bettered the .300 mark being Outfielders Dave Harris, Carl Reynolds and Sam Rice, and Shortstop Joe Cronin.

Judge and Kuhel Share First Base.

Joe Judge played almost as many games at first as did Joe Kuhel and this pair finished first and third, respectively, among the league's first-baseman, with Kuhel outhitting Judge, .291 to .257. Buddy Myer finished fourth among second-basemen, Ossie Bluege third among the third-sackers, Cronin led the shortstops, while Manush rated second among the fly-chasers.

During the preceding off-season Reynolds was obtained in a deal from the Chisox and in the first few weeks of play, he led the league in hitting. Then he had a long slump and he was just coming out of it when Bill Dickey, Yankee catcher, hit him on the jaw and broke it. This was part of Washington's Independence Day celebration and the flychaser was practically through for the year.

Team Crippled In Boston.

The Nats hung in the first flight all season. The turning point came in Boston on June 4 when the lowly Red Sox beat them a double-header. Besides taking the one-two punch, in these games Cronin was hit with a ball and broke a finger and thumb, West was hit on the ear by a wild heave, and Manush reinjured the leg which had kept him inactive so much the previous season. From then on, the Nats were through as pennant contenders.

About two weeks before the season ended, they clinched third place from the challenging Indians, but all they could do was to come close to the A's in the chase for runner-up honors.

After the season ended, Johnson was released as manager by President Clark Griffith and Cronin given the job for the coming season. The great young shortstop will not be 27 years old until next October, making him the youngest to ever pilot a major league team.

Numerous Trades Revamp Club.

Fans hardly will recognize the 1933 aggregation for a series of December deals sent Fred Marberry, Sam West, Harley Boss, Lloyd Brown, Carl Reynolds, Dick Coffman and Roy Spencer away and, in their stead, brings here Pitchers Earl Whitehill, Walter Stewart and Jack Russell, Outfielders Goose Goslin and Fred Schulte, and Catcher Luke Sewell.

One veteran who will be missed is Joe Judge . . . He was given his unconditional release so that he could sign with the Brooklyn Dodgers . . . Dale Alexander, of the Red Sox, led the American in batting . . . In the National, stick honors went to Frank O'Doul, of the Dodgers . . . Manush hit safely in 22 consecutive games during the season . . . Jimmy Foxx stole the show as a home run hitter . . . he poled out 58, within two of Ruth's all-time mark . . . Chuck Klein, although finishing third to O'Doul in averages in the National, led in scoring, in hits, in total bases, in stolen bases, and tied with Mel Ott for the home run lead, with 38 . . . Roger Cramer, of the A's, tied a world's record . . . he hit safely six times in a row in a nine-inning game . . . Goose Goslin made five hits, including two triples, in as many times at bat against the Yankees in one game . . . Jimmy Foxx and Chuck Klien were voted most valuable in their respective leagues.

HOWARD 44-39 VICTOR OVER VA. STATE

Showboat Ware, Back in Line-Up, Is Star of Last Game.

IN A GAME conceded by old-timers as the fastest ever played on a Howard University court, the Virginia State quint, from Petersburg, conqueror of Morgan College and Hampton, went down to defeat last night before a determined Bison five, which played the visitors off their feet and won, 44-39.

Showboat Ware was back in the game after a week's illness, and gave color and fire to the Bison performance, tossing ringers from impossible angles, or teaming handily with his sidekick, Carter, whose sure-fire toss from beneath the basket bounced five times off the backboard through the mesh.

The half ended 20-15, with the Bisons leading, and the 5-point lead was maintained throughout the second period. Coach Burr did not risk a substitution throughout, the five on the floor threatening to rank with stellar Bison teams of years gone by. This team will probably be the line-up to represent Howard in two games with Lincoln this week; in Philadelphia and in Orange, N. J.

MAJ. SUTHERLAND HAILED AS BEST D. C. AMATEUR GOLFER

Service Star Has Sound Game

Army-Navy Club's Champion Faces 4 Years Play Here.

Strong With Wooden Clubs; Points for District Tourney.

(Herewith is the third of a series of articles dealing with amateur champions of the District golf clubs.)

CONSIDERED by many critics who have carefully studied his game to be the best amateur golfer in the District today, Maj. Richard Kerens Sutherland, U. S. A., now on duty at the War College, is expected to turn in an impressive tournament record in the next four years while he is stationed in Washington.

Athough he spent last summer in Washington, his work at the War College prohibited him from participating in any local tournaments with the exception of the Army and Navy Club championship, which he won from Capt. Kendall J. Fielder, 5 and 4.

Last week, however, orders were issued at the War Department ordering the golfing major to duty on the General Staff Corps, here, and he will be eligible for the District Amateur and other important local tournaments for four more years. His War College course ends July 1 of this year.

Experience Gained at Many Clubs.

The son of Hon. Howard Sutherland, Alien Property Custodian, and himself an outstanding player at the Burning Tree Club, Maj. Sutherland has played golf at a number of important clubs throughout the country while stationed at a score of Army posts.

The winner of the President's Trophy at the sporty Minikahda Club in Minneapolis in 1926, Maj. Sutherland had his only chance to play in the National Amateur in 1927, when it was held at that club while he was stationed at nearby Faribault, Minn. The Golf Annual for that year testifies that he missed qualification by one stroke.

He won the United States Army tournament in 1930 from Lieut. J. F. Cranston at Fort Leavenworth, Kans., by the score of 4 and 3. This was the last time that this event was played.

In 1931 he played in the Southern Amateur, finishing the last nine holes of his qualifying round in a cloudburst. His poor last nine holes forced him into the second flight, which he won in this important intersectional tournament.

Boosts Steady, Orthodox Style of Play.

A tour of duty at the Ecole de Guerre, in France, afforded him an opportunity to play courses throughout England and France, especially at Biarritz and Le Boulie.

An extremely steady, orthodox game with an outstandingly accurate eye for direction is the best description that can be given to Maj. Sutherland's game. Well rounded out in every department of the game, he possesses a world of golfing experience and has a good conservative golfing temperament.

The steadiness of his game is best described by the fact that he played ten consecutive rounds at the Army-Navy Club last summer while competing as a week-end golfer in a total of 729 strokes, 1 stroke less than an average of 73. And his lowest score in this series of rounds was 71

His favorite clubs are his woods Players who have played with him over a period of time describe his game as "extremely sound, with no particular strong points and, on the other hand, no particular weak points."

His altogether impressive record will make him an outstanding threat in coming District tournaments if the pressure of his War Department work does not keep him away from the golf courses.

MAJ. RICHARD K. SUTHERLAND.

SPEAKING —OF— TENNIS

By BOB CONSIDINE

THE forbidding leers, which the British and French Tennis Associations are directing toward America, and her hope for an open tournament, will have no bearing on whether or not the much-discussed tournament will be held, it was said yesterday by Lawrence A. Baker, secretary of the U. S. L. T. A.

Last week the American Tennis Guild placed its stamp of approval on such a joint gathering of pros and amateurs—after three or four years of balks. It did so with the realization that no matter how much of a howl the British and French, in fact, the whole International Association raised, the tournament could become a possibility. We'd simply use American players.

Germantown Cricket Club To Hold Event.

It handed over the fate of the tournament to the Germantown Cricket Club, ancient fortress of amateur tennis, to find a place for it on the summer's schedule, a date that will please the U. S. L. T. A.'s executive committee and also the pros, although, of course, there should be no difficulty on the latter score, for these are not very toothsome times for the little band of good pros and a job's a job. Definite announcement of the fate of the tournament probably will come forth from the next meeting of the executive committee of the national tennis body, March 1.

The British say that any Briton who plays in it will not be eligible to play at Wimbledon, and the French have raised a howl of equal gustiness. Aside from the fact that we could stage the meet without foreign entanglements, it might be said that the British complaint is more artistic than the French. The English succored tennis at its birth. They saw it handed to the wealthiest and more leisurely class of the land and cherished by them alone. It was the politest of all games, a game for nobility alone, expensive—and yet free of any suggestion of money.

English Have Held to Their Traditions.

The traditions, whether they are good or not, have come down untrammeled through the history of English tennis. It is as hard for the oldsters of the game in England to picture mixed competition with pros as it is for an American to picture John McCormack stooping on the concert stage to collect pennies thrown to him after singing some cherished folksong.

The English will not allow pros even to act as umpires and linemen on matches.

The French, of course, fear that the mixed competition will spread to their country and "wise up" the fathers of French taxation, who now soak most of the sports 40 per cent tax and have left tennis free of such an impost.

Americans certainly should go for a pro-amateur event under proper handling. Back in 1926, C. C. Pyle, the verbose promoter, blared that he was going to put tennis on the map by holding a pro-amateur tournament wherein the winner, if he were a pro, would get $50,000 and the amateur, if he won, a nice small loving cup. Obviously that offer found no fertile ground among the blueblood rulers of American tennis and quickly fell into abandonment. This new idea is in keeping with everything that is proper in the game. It so happens that it comes at a propitious time—with Tilden still near his best (for three sets at least) and such up and coming pros as Nusslein, Plaa and one or two others.

Army-Navy Seeks Title Tourney.

The Army and Navy Country Club will seek the District championship for the coming year, it was decided at a meeting of the club tennis committee last night. If the tournament is granted to this club, it will mark the first time in its 46 years that it will be played on composition courts, the club having five of those quick-drying green courts which make tennis more of a pleasure than it ordinarily is.

It will also take the District championship out of the District for the umpteeth time. The only two times the tournament has been played within the corporate limits of the city since the passing of the Dumbarton Club were in 1927 and 1932, when it was committed at Wardman's courts. Other years it has been held in nearby Maryland, either at Columbia or Edgemoor.

Speaking of clubs, one may be formed when the season opens at Wardman. Washington has not had a strictly tennis club in nearly seven years and the demand for one perpetually grows. A tennis club would make a definite appeal to that large gathering of players who no longer are hardy enough to stand the rigors of playing on the showerless and benchless public courts and yet have not either the time, inclination or perhaps finances to join a country club which incorporates tennis among its manifold facilities.

It should also score a renaissance in the social end of the game, which has been sinking steadily since tennis in Washington lost its cohesiveness and splattered all over the place like a fallen drop of quicksilver.

GOLF STARS IN 4-BALL TOURNEY

Armour, Dutra Top Entries in $2,500 Florida Play.

MIAMI, Fla., Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Thirty-two of the nation's leading golfers wound up practice tonight for tomorrow's inaugural of the annual international four-ball matches.

Teamed as evenly as the tournament committee could accomplish, the golfers will start four days of match for the $2,500 purse, reduced in the eighth annual competition from the $5,000 prize money that has been offered heretofore.

The entire field, led by Tommy Armour, cowinner of last year's tournament, and Olin Dutra, P. G. A. titleholder, who is teamed with Armour, made their final rounds of the Miami Country Club course today.

Armour and Dutra were top-seeded pair in pretournament guessing, but their first-round opponents, Herman Barron, of Port Chester, N. Y., and John Kinder, of Caldwell, N. J., turned in a best ball 33—35—68 in a practice round.

Post's Weekly Bowling Round-Up

A CRACK field of duckpinners, including many out-of-town stars, will toe the line for the George Washington Sweepstakes to be rolled Wednesday at the Lucky Strike bowling alleys. The test will be over the 15-game route.

Baltimore is sending Ray Barnes, Ray Von Dreele and Myer Jacobson, among others. "Hobnails" Francis, colorful Richmond duckpinner, will make his first appearance on a local alley. Tony Santini, who won the tournament last year, will defend his title. Bill Arnold, of Annapolis, national singles champion, also is expected to enter.

The entrance fee is $15, including the cost of games. First prize is expected to be in the neighborhood of $150.

The first five games will be rolled at 11 a. m., with subsequent sets at 3 p. m. and 8 p. m.

Rosslyn rolled 551, 534 and 604 to win all three from Boulevard in their Interurban League match last night at Rosslyn. Boulevard's games were 535, 504 and 523. Charley Haverty's 357 set was high, with Oscar Swain winning game honors by virtue of his 144 score.

Robey's 375 set and Bradley's 144 game featured Petworth's 2-1 victory over Takoma in another Interurban League match rolled at Takoma. Petworth's games were 581, 540, 622, a set of 1,724. Takoma rolled 517, 590 and 537 for a 1,643 set.

Despite Joe Della's brilliant bowling, the Victoria Team, of Baltimore, lost to Northeast Temple in their match last night at Temple alleys by a score of 3,063 to 3,012.

JIM CORBETT EXPIRES AT AGE OF 66

Ex-Heavy Champion Dies in Sleep After Calling for Wife.

Corbett had received his last communion several days ago and his parish priest was there to administer the last rites of the church.

Although it had been expected for weeks, the news of Corbett's death brought spontaneous tribute throughout the sporting world, from San Francisco, where he was born and first rose to fighting fame, to New York, where "Pompadour Jim," first and perhaps greatest of all heavyweight boxing kings, enjoyed a social and theatrical success long after he retired from the ring in 1903.

Not far from the Broadway he loved so well himself and that knew him for 30 years as one of its most striking figures, final homage will be paid to Corbett's memory at the funeral services Monday at 11 a. m. at St. Malachy's Church on West Forty-ninth street, between Broadway and Eighth avenue, a block from the new Madison Square Garden.

Corbett's death closed a remarkable career and removed another link connecting the highly developed sports sphere with the colorful exciting days when pugilism was emerging from its fugitive habits. A dashing figure, famous for his wit, his showmanship and as an exponent of physical culture and scientific boxing, he remained conspicuous in sporting life until well into his sixties.

They often pointed to "Gentleman Jim" as a model of physical perfection, of what boxing could do for a man who knew when to quit and how to take care of himself. Tall, striking and deep-voiced, at 62 he looked fully 15 years younger and prided himself in his ability to continue a robust, full existence.

First Warning Year Ago.

About a year ago, for the first time, he had his first warning of a break in his rare health. While riding in a subway a terrific pain shot through his chest, partially paralyzing his left side. He gasped for breath and leaned against a wall—"waiting for death," he told friends later.

Crowds hurried past him, with scant notice paid to the tall man who seemed a bit tired. He did not ask for any assistance.

"I just didn't want anybody to know that Jim Corbett couldn't take care of himself," he said afterward. A half hour later he had mustered enough strength to walk to a cab and tell the driver to take him home.

He survived by more than fifteen years the men against whom he fought his winning and losing championship battles. Sullivan, who was knocked out by Corbett in New Orleans in September, 1892, died in February, 1918. Robert L. ("Ruby Bob") Fitzsimmons, whose famous "solar plexus" punch dropped Corbett and cost him the heavyweight crown in March, 1897, at Carson City, Nev., died in October, 1917.

Retires in 1903 to Go On Stage.

After twice failing to regain the title in fights with James J. Jeffries, Corbett retired from the ring in 1903 and embarked on a theatrical career that was astonishing for its success and variety. At one time he was the highest paid actor on the stage, according to his old manager, William A. Brady, who said "Gentleman Jim" drew as high as $1,500 a week in vaudeville. He made triumphant tours at home and abroad.

At one time wealthy enough to count his moneyed possessions in six figures, Corbett was comfortably fixed financially in spite of heavy losses in the stock market crash, his friends said today. He invested considerably in real estate near his home and wisely provided for his and his wife's old age with his theatrical earnings. He was married twice but had no children. Vera Taylor Corbett, with whom he spent so many years here, was his second wife.

Corbett was the biggest "money fighter" of his day. He fought Sullivan at New Orleans for a purse of $25,000 and a side bet of $10,000, out of which he at once telegraphed $11,000 to pay off the mortgage on his father's property in San Francisco, but these amounts paled beside the huge sums that later went to Jack Dempsey and Gene Tunney in the big boom. Corbett and Jeffries were at the ringside, dictating their stories of the fight, when Dempsey and Tunney battled before a $2,500,000 crowd in Chicago in 1927.

COAST ARTILLERY WINS.

With McCahey showing the way, 260th Coast Artillery basketers defeated Pepco by a score of 27-26 in a thrilling game played on the winners' floor last night.

FITZGERALD SOUTHPAW WINNER

K. C. Bowler's 634 Beats Krause by 4-Pin Margin.

IN one of the most exciting duckpin duels rolled in this city in some time, Larry Fitzgerald, star Knights of Columbus League bowler, came from behind in the final game to nose out Lonnie Krause by the slim margin of four pins and win the annual Southpaw Sweepstakes last night at the Georgetown Recreation alleys. Fitzgerald rolled 634 to regain the crown he held in 1930. Krause finished with 630.

Ed Schlegel and Dick Lee rolled home in a tie for third with scores of 611 each. Lee won the roll-off.

Fitzgerald opened with a score of 140, while Krause' initial effort netted only 114 pins. But the Irishman dropped to 110 in his second game as Krause rallied for a 119 score, slightly bridging the distance between the two.

Krause' 129 in the third gave him a 1-pin lead over his rival, boosting his score to 362 as Fitzgerald spilled but 111 pins. The veteran Dutchman increased this margin to five pins with a game of 134 in the fourth game, while Fitzgerald rallied with a score of 130 to bring his total to 491.

Both were on edge as the fifth and final game wore away, but slowly and surely Fitzgerald cut deeper and deeper into his rival's lead with an assortment of strikes and spares that netted a total of 143 pins, while Krause repeated his fourth-game count of 134.

The victory netted the winner $18 and a gold medal. Krause received $10, while third place netted $5. Ed Schlegel's high game of 148, highest of the tournament, earned a prize of $3.

JIM CORBETT STARTED NEW ERA OF RING

Boston man's stomach. Down went John L.'s guard. As quick as a flash up came Corbett's right. It was the first punch that carried Jim's full strength. It sent Sullivan groggy. Again Sullivan rushed his man and acted like a demon. Jim sent a shower of lefts and rights. Sullivan turned, staggered, then fell. He dropped to the dirt floor of the ring on his face, and Referee Duffy counted him out. A new champion had been crowned."

"But 'Gentleman Jim' held his title only five years. Charley Mitchell, British champion, was a three-round knockout victim at Jacksonville, Fla., January 25, 1894, before Ruby Rob Fitzsimmons came along in 1897 to win the crown at Carson City, Nev., in what old timers still regard as one of the luckiest victories in ring history.

For thirteen rounds, on St. Patrick's Day, Corbett gave the freckled Welshman a terrific lacing, but in the fourteenth, still desperate, peering through blood-streaked eyes, Fitz wildly threw his right for the head. Easily Corbett pulled away, but Bob pivoted as he missed. He swung his left.

The punch landed in Corbett's body, directly under the juncture of the ribs, and the champion collapsed gasping, his legs temporarily paralyzed. He could see everything that went on, could hear, think, but he couldn't move. In agony, he was counted out. Fitz took the title and the "solar plexus punch" was born.

Corbett Charges at Fitzsimmons.

When Corbett recovered, a few scant seconds after the count was completed, he forgot himself for one of the rare times in his life. He raged across the ring, trying to punch at the still dazed Fitzsimmons.

"You'll fight me again," he shouted, "or I'll whip you every time I meet you on the street."

Fitzsimmons backed against the ropes.

"You ever lay a hand on me again Jim," he snarled, "and I'll shoot you dead."

Fitz never gave him another chance, but after Jim Jeffries beat the Cornishman in 1898, Corbett tried once more for the title. For 22 rounds of a 25-round battle at Coney Island, May 11, 1900, Corbett slugged the California bear man at will. He was well on the way to becoming the first heavyweight champion in history to regain his title.

But in the twenty-third round, with Jeffries still charging forward Corbett made one mistake. One of his tricks was to lure an opponent into chasing him to a corner, then Corbett would dart aside, twist the opponent as he charged by, and whale him with both hands.

This time he misjudged by inches, as he bounced out of Jeffries' way, the human grizzly bear swung a ponderous left. Corbett jumped straight into it. The blow smashed on his chin, he toppled forward on his face, cleanly knocked out.

Jim stayed but little longer with the fight game. He knocked out Kid McCoy in the original Madison Square Garden here in five rounds, August 30, 1900, but there was considerable suspicion McCoy had "taken a dive." He fought Jeffries again in 1903 in San Francisco. But the spark had gone. Jeffries knocked him out in ten rounds.

That was Corbett's last fight. With Brady, his manager, he took to the stage, where he made a tidy fortune. Occasionally he sat in at ringsides as an expert, and invariably his judgment of what would happen was exactly the opposite to what actually did happen.

Maryland Cubs Win; Scheele, Buscher Star

by DAVE HERMAN

WHEN August 8 rolls around, the date set for the staging of the sectional trials for the national amateur championship, the District will draft into action another formidable array of contestants for places.

Last season in the test conducted at Chevy Chase, the Middle Atlantic sector qualified nineteen for the all-important tournament at Five Farms, nine of whom were from Washington, six from Maryland, three from Virginia and one from Pennsylvania.

That District golfers will place heavily in this year's test, or make an even better showing than in 1932, is a foregone conclusion if their performances in tournaments last season are to be taken as a criterion of what may be expected in the competition late this summer.

A number of golfers of Washington clubs have displayed marked improvement in their games, and, when the season, now in the offing, goes into full swing, you will hear much from them. New stars are always shooting across the horizon and there's no telling what veteran may find himself a champion overnight and what young lad may become the boy sensation.

Golfers Awaiting Decision As to Sites.

Golfers along the local Rialto are still awaiting with great interest the decision that the United States Golf Association will make with respect to selecting a site for the holding of the amateur trials. By another week, some word ought to be coming out of headquarters in New York. Secretary Reed, of the U. S. G. A., announced recently that a decision on covering both the open and amateur locations would be made by March 1.

Either Manor or Five Farms will get the call. Those close to the situation believe the latter course will be selected, since the 1932 trials were held on a District links. Another point strongly in favor of Five Farms is that—to repeat what has been mentioned in a previous column—on this very course the last national amateur championship was conducted most successfully.

But to get back to the golfers who promise to step out and do big things in the 1933 amateur test—and maybe in the historic classic scheduled at the Kenwood Country Club in Cincinnati, September 11-16.

Naturally, there will be plenty of youngsters bidding for places, some of them stars who blossomed out long before bleak November came around last season.

Pitt Likely to Be in Thick Of Fight.

Harry Pitt, Manor's galloping "Moose," nosed out for the medal in the 1932 event at Chevy Chase by Chandler Harper, unquestionably will be in the thick of the fight this season. Pitt crashed through with a glistening performance and only a few bad drives prevented him from topping the pack. Pitt's morning round, it is recalled, netted him a 71, and to him during that journey fell the honor of bagging the lowest nine of any contestant in the competition.

Here was the "Moose" zooming along at a sizzling pace, dropping two birdies in a row on the incoming nine for a 33, one below par. In the afternoon Pitt was guilty of taking one 6 and three 5s, and his score for the final 18 went up to 73.

This Chandler Harper, a tall, lean, black-haired youth from Portsmouth, was hard to beat that day and is tough to beat any day when he's on his game. Harper breezed in with two consistent rounds, having a 71—72 Former Virginia amateur champion and present holder of the Old Dominion Open crown, Harper will be one of Virginia's outstanding contenders, along with Billy Howell, for the sectional medal.

Howell Trails Pitt by Single Stroke.

It was Howell, of Richmond, 1931 medalist, who finished one stroke back of Pitt. Undaunted by a 75 in the morning, Howell came through with two nines of 35 in the afternoon for a 70 to score the lowest 18 of any golfer in the list. Runner-up to Johnny Fischer for the national intercollegiate championship, twice winner of the Middle Atlantic title, and beaten by Francis Ouimet in a heart-breaking match in the semifinals of the 1931 national amateur at Five Farms, young Howell will be another of those Virginians Pitt et als. will have to contend with in the sectional event.

Both Howell and Harper, sometimes referred to as the "Virginia Twins," failed to strike their stride in the national amateur at Five Farms, after both had qualified in the 1931 event at Beverly Country Club, Chicago. Bad putting on the part of both forced their scores to soar into the eighties on each day it is recalled, and they were disappointed considerably at their showing.

If Roger Peacock, of Indian Spring, the District champion, continues to play the golf he did last year, he can be put down as another certain qualifier. Peacock finished 5 strokes back of the leader at Chevy Chase in the sectional, but his 72 on the last round was an exhibition of steady plodding. Peacock has a bag full of shots, a well developed and smooth swing—he certainly hits them in the groove—and on top of that has icy nerves.

Peacock Sensational in First Major Tourney.

Peacock finished two strokes out of the qualifying circle at Five Farms. It was his first major championship event, and his 75-79 were nifty rounds, considering the fact that the defending champion, Francis Ouimet, barely squeezed into the match-play class.

There is every reason to believe that Maurice Nee, Manor's 17-year-old athlete, will enjoy a banner year in golf. An athlete at Georgetown Prep, Nee keeps himself in fine fettle all the time and is a stronger fellow than he was last year. He is a tall boy, plays a bang-up game of football and basket ball, and when the season for shooting goals is over confines his shooting to the golf courses.

Nee did nicely in the sectional and also in the big push at Five Farms. His first round of 76 was nice work in the national event. The Manor youth clouts a booming tee shot and is very consistent. He seems to have the spirit and fire and dash about him to make a national champion. Remember, he's still very young. Nee outclassed the field in winning the District junior championship. Roger Peacock won this title in 1931, and the next year stepped out to annex the real District plum. Maybe Nee will do the same this year.

Billy Dettweiler, Washington's kid sensation in 1932, soon will reach his fifteenth birthday. He was the youngest entry at Five Farms and it was something beautiful to watch this boy get out on the first tee of the opening round, hammer out a 220-yard tee shot, and then come home in the evening to report a 78, identical figures turned in by the Boston expert, Francis Ouimet. It was Dettweiler's first important championship and his showing evoked national comment.

Dettweiler already has opened his practice campaign and expects to flash his best golf this season. His 72 in the sectional event at Chevy Chase is something that elicited praise from all sides. He unquestionably has the makings of a good golfer, and it may be a few years before he hits a steady low-scoring pace in tournaments. Billy slumped in a number of events after his fine showing in the sectional. He went to pieces in the junior and city events, but his disastrous showing in both did not take the heart out of him. He knows he's young, and has much to learn.

There are many other District golfers who will be shooting for the chance to enter the national amateur and emulate the feats of Roland Mackenzie.

Stevinson Still Good as He Ever Was.

Miller B. Stevinson, of Columbia, who has participated a number of times in the national classic, can be counted on to be a participant again. Stevinson is one of the best golfers in the Middle Atlantic section, and, while a veteran, continues to play his shots with the same skill he did five and ten years ago. He is Columbia's ace, now that Roland Mackenzie has deserted the amateur ranks.

Johnny Brawner, of Columbia, Washington's only qualifier in the 1932 classic, is a good, steady golfer, and, if he gets in more than week-end playing, he may have many dazzling rounds such as his last in the qualifying play at Five Farms—the round that sent him into a tie for thirty-second position. One can never forget Brawner's birdies on the thirty-fifth and thirty-sixth and the boldness with which he played his shots against Ross Somerville, the eventual champion, in his first round match.

Columbia also will have other good contestants in Albert MacKenzie, Everett Eynon and Clyde B. Asher.

Martin F. McCarthy, Beaver Dam's sharpshooter, had a good season and is a most improved golfer. A qualifier in 1932, McCarthy failed to get going at Five Farms. Also from Beaver Dam there is Johnny Miller, club champion, a golfer who is coming along nicely.

Chevy Chase will offer such strong contestants as Freddie Hitz, champion; C. Ashmead Fuller, former club title holder, and Beverly Mason, a youngster who has lots of promise.

Hufty, Steward Stars of Congressional.

Congressional has two polished players in Page Hufty, present champion and former North and South winner, and Luther Steward, jr. Both hit long balls off the tee and are uncanny putters.

Over at Indian Spring, much will be heard from Tom Belshe, the towering golfer with the rifle-like tee shot; Dr. Larry Otell, champion, and J. W. Harvie, jr.

Much is to be expected from a number of Army and Navy County Club players, particularly Maj. R. K. Sutherland, present club and Army champion. J. Monro Hunter, Army and Navy pro, considered Maj. Sutherland one of the finest amateur golfers in the District and is not far from being right.

Then there are Capt. Kendall J. Fielder and Maj. E. A. Noyes, both of whom are steady from tee to green. Put these three down as among the District stars to bear watching in the sectional qualifying. Maj. Sutherland has participated in a national amateur and is an experienced golfer.

Franklin Parks, bespectacled young golfer from Congressional, who qualified for the amateur last year, should be another potent contender for honors. He certainly has the form and the necessary stuff that makes a good golfer. Also, Parker Nolan, for a number of years a threat in tournament play. Nolan is one of the longest drivers in Washington.

Webb, Fuller and Hair Give W. C. C. Good Trio.

Washington Golf and Country Club has Dr. Tom Webb, Ralph Fuller and Reese Hair, each of whom has a well-rounded game. Dr. Webb, one of the best putters at the club, is the present champion.

Just which golfer along the list mentioned will prove the shining light this season is something that can be answered only when the golf campaign comes to a close in the fall. Roland Mackenzie is no longer a contestant from the simon-pure brigade, and George Voigt is claimed as a famous son of New York.

Who will it be now?

Emerson Five Scores At Gettysburg, 38-12

Special to The Washington Post.

Gettysburg, Pa., Feb. 18.—Emerson Institute, of Washington, D. C., scored an impressive victory over Gettysburg Academy here today, winning by a score of 38 to 12. The visitors simply were too experienced for the home team.

Emerson rolled up a 17-to-8 lead in the first half, in which Lucas and Bentley played leading roles. Gettysburg faded from the picture in the second half when held to a meager four points.

FEDERATED CITIZENS AGAIN SCORE R. F. C. LENDING TO DISTRICT

Three Hours Are Devoted to Debate; Considerable Misinformation.

Smarting under criticisms in the press of its action at a previous meeting, the Federation of Citizens Associations last night reaffirmed its opposition to any legislation which would enable the District to borrow from the Reconstruction Finance Corporation on the same terms as the 48 States. The vote was 57 to 15.

Almost three hours were devoted to debate and discussion, which were characterized by considerable misinformation, most of which went uncorrected, after George E. Sullivan, vice president and chairman of the laws and legislation committee, made a motion for reconsideration of the issue and then read a lengthy report setting forth his committee's reasons for recommending disapproval.

James E. Yaden, president of the federation, threw the meeting open to debate with but a 5-minute limitation on each speaker after the report had been read. Nearly two score participated.

Major Objections to Bill.

The major objections to the bill as voiced by the laws and legislation committee and other opponents were briefly: (1) that there is considerable doubt whether the Reconstruction Finance Corporation would grant the District's request for a loan in view of greater needs throughout the country; (2) the District government is prohibited by its organic act from borrowing money; (3) Congress can be called upon at the anticipated special session for additional funds if the $1,250,000 appropriated and expected for the calendar year 1933 are not sufficient; (4) further funds should come from the District's (anticipated) surplus; and (5) the District should not have to care for the thousands of transients that flock to the National Capital.

E. J. Brennan pointed out that the federation had some years ago indorsed a departure from the antiborrowing provision of the organic act when it approved a loan of $16,000,000 to the National Capital Park and Planning Commission by the Federal Government for use in buying park lands. Ten million of this has already been borrowed, he declared.

$3.65 a Week for Family.

"If the District can borrow $10,000,000 for buying parks, we can borrow enough to feed starving people who are now getting but $3.65 a week for a family of four under present administration of the welfare department's emergency relief program," he asserted.

William McK. Clayton said the bill would merely place the District on the same basis as the 48 States and that there is no certainty that any money will ever be borrowed. L. A. Carruthers, chairman of the fiscal relations committee, which at the previous meeting had reported favorably on the bill, said the authorization would serve as a safeguard in case relief funds are exhausted while Congress is not in session.

Although there was much talk of utilizing the District's surplus, which was variously estimated at from $5,000,000 to $6,000,000, no one pointed out that Auditor D. J. Donovan estimates that on July 1, 1933, the District will have a surplus of but $7,900. Whether there will be any surplus during the next fiscal year is conjectural.

Recommends Provision.

The report finally adopted by the federation recommends that the District appropriations bill carry a provision which would authorize the Commissioners to us additional District funds in case the $1,250,000 is exhausted while Congress is adjourned. The limit of this fund was left blank, to be filled in by Congress.

The federation, with but one dissenting vote, adopted the education committee's report approving an extension of milk-and-cracker lunches for school children, as provided by Parent-Teacher Associations, but opposing the use of school facilities to furnish hot meals to needy children and others as ordered by the Board of Education.

A survey by school officals to determine exactly the needs of school children in this field was recommended with the further recommendation that all such cases of dire need should be taken care of in the homes by established welfare agencies.

Reports Are Attacked.

Harry N. Stull, chairman of the committee, scoffed at published reports that there are 5,000 starving children in the schools, but admitted that there are "isolated instances" of dire need.

Mrs. Giles Scott Rafter was the only delegate voting no to the report.

The federation voted unanimously to ask the Senate to restore appropriations for operation of the two recently constructed municipal incinerators, and for operation of the new testing laboratory in the Highway Department. These items were deleted by the House District Appropriations Committee. The Senate also will be asked to restore any school construction items which the House has eliminated.

Mrs. Clara Wright Smith, by a vote of 49 to 20, was elected over William A. Saul as a member of the federation's executive committee, to fill a vacancy created by retirement of Mrs. E. C. Rittue.

Red Cross Will Teach Hygiene and Sick Care

Three courses in home hygiene and care of the sick will be given by the District Chapter of the American Red Cross, beginning February 28 at 7:30 p. m., at the Red Cross national headquarters, 1730 E street northwest. They will be concluded March 8.

The course is given as a part of the health education program of the Red Cross, the chief object being personal and general health. The course includes twelve lessons, each lesson consisting of two hours' duration twice a week. The objects of the course are to train and to organize a body of women to supplement the work of the trained nurse, who will volunteer their services in times of disaster or sudden emergencies.

CLUB TO HONOR AVIATRICES

10 RECORD BREAKERS OF SKY TO BE FETED

Five Women Fliers on Honor List; Aero Club to Give Ball Saturday.

Ten record breakers of the sky, including five women, will be honored with a reception and ball by the Aero Club of Washington next Saturday evening at the Willard Hotel.

The representation of feminine fliers to be honored is made additionally significant by the versatility of their accomplishments, embracing duration, distance, speed and altitude. The men distinguished themselves exclusively in speed and altitude.

Mrs. Amelia Earhart Putnam, who in a non-stop dash from Los Angeles to Newark, created a new record, will be the guest of honor. Mrs. Putnam, with the following aviators, will receive certificates from Senator Hiram Bingham, president of the National Aeronautic Association.

Maj. James (Jimmie) Doolittle, who rocketed his minute Gee-Bee to an international speed record of 294.38 miles an hour; James G. Haizlip, who eclipsed the former transcontinental speed record by flying across America in 10 hours 19 minutes; Mrs. May Haizlip, whose speed of 252.226 miles an hour set a new international feminine speed mark; Mrs. Louise Thaden and Mrs. Frances Marsalis, who kept their famous "flying boudoir" aloft for 196 hours 5 minutes, to capture the international feminine refueling endurance record; Jack O'Meara, whose expert soaring won for him the distance record for gliders of nearly 67 miles and the altitude record for gliders of 4,780 feet; Col. Clarence Chamberlain, who set an American altitude record for Deisel engine powered machines of 19,393 feet, only to lose it shortly afterward to Miss Ruth Nichols, who climbed to a new record of 19,928 feet; and Col. Roscoe Turner, who established a new East-West transcontinental speed mark of 12 hours and 33 minutes.

Mother and Daughter Hurt in Motor Crash

Mrs. Ida Goldstein, 52, 3305 Georgia avenue northwest, and her daughter, Mrs. Ethel Reibhoson, 631 Keifer place northwest, suffered minor injuries yesterday in an automobile collison at Sixth and Morton streets northwest. The women were riding with Wallace Randolph, 512 Park road northwest, an automobile salesman.

Walter W. Jackson, 38, 1617 Harvard street northwest, was arrested in connection with the accident, charged with driving while drunk and leaving the scene of an accident without identifying himself.

INDIVIDUAL ACTORS SHINE IN PLAYLETS

Another Round in Tourney at Eastern High Provides Good Entertainment.

Comedy and outstanding work by individual actors led the field in last night's round of four one-act plays in the 1933 Community Center tournament at Eastern High School.

"The Girl," an adroit comedy presented by the Southeast Community Players, proved to be the only product of the evening which was consistently good, the other offerings being praiseworthy in spots and weak in others.

The Southeast entry was well nigh flawless, Robert Trebor contributing one of the best pieces of acting seen in the tournament up to date. Jesse Veitch, as the butler, and Maurice Jarvis, in the role of the other man, filled their parts to perfection. If any criticism is to be made, it lies in the speculation on a man of Veitch's stature being able to whip one of Jarvis'.

John Pragley, as the "love pirate" in the play of that name given by the St. James Players, revealed himself to be a lively and convincing interpreter of a type of a gauche youth who knew what he wanted. Gordon Prowse, as the father, put almost too much of himself into his part, knocking the play out of proportion by his eagerness to put himself over. The balance of the cast—Ada Dowling, Vera Barkes, Julia Draper and Paul Dowling—did well.

In the field of drama, the Christian Endeavor Players, performing "The Dust of the Road," worked valiantly with a difficult and impressive theme—a production that will undoubtedly give the judges something to think about. Bringing a symbolic Biblical character into a modern setting is a bold objective for amateurs, and although Wade Robinson, in the role of Judas Iscariot in the disguise of a tramp, appeared to put his heart into the acting, he gave the impression of lacking something—that intangible shroud of emotionalism with which an accomplished actor sends a thrill through a crowded theater. Eileen Robinson, as the scornful wife, was perhaps the best in the play, while Wayne Bost, as the husband, lent a compelling tinge of cynicism to his rendition. Walter Bucher, appearing briefly, was highly satisfying.

The fourth presentation, "Joint Owners in Spain," offered by the Mothers Dramatic Club of the Buchanan Parent-Teacher Association had its moments, but they were few and far between. Weak elocution and placement sent this production down into the line of also rans.

The tournament will continue Tuesday night at Roosevelt High School.

DEMOCRATS NAMED IN DRIVE ON DEFICIT CONFRONTING PARTY

Ernest Walker Picks Local Assistants to Aid in Raising $750,000.

Ernest G. Walker, appointed national finance director of the District of Columbia for the Democratic national finance committee by Chairman James A. Farley, yesterday announced the names of members of a local committee which will push an organized drive here to help pay off $750,000 Democratic campaign deficit.

The committee includes Robert N. Anderson, R. Lee Barnes, John P. Bramhall, Merritt O. Chance, John B. Colpoys, Miss Eleanor Connolly, Frederic A. Delano, Franklin H. Ellis, Jonathan C. Gibson, Admiral Cary T. Grayson, Robert N. Harper, Mrs. Charles S. Hamlin, Miss Mae Helm, Mrs. Samuel Herrick, Carter B. Keene, John E. Laskey, Oliver P. Newman, Reginald F. Nicholson, Arthur O'Brien, Daniel C. Roper, Victor Russell, Mrs. Edward Shouse, F. W. Steckman, Huston Thompson, South Trimble, jr., Robert W. Woolley, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Charles Warren, and John F. Costello.

"It is the purpose," Mr. Walker said, "to afford everybody interested an opportunity to contribute to the clearing away of the party deficit, however small their contribution may be. As it will obviously be impossible for me or for members assisting me to reach all Democrats here, Mr. Farley approved the suggestion that contributions could well be received at the national headquarters. Due acknowledgement of all payments will be made from New York."

Democratic organizations in the District are preparing to extend support. This includes the Woman's National Democratic Club and the Woman's Educational Council. The District Democratic advisory committee has voted to make "an energetic effort" to raise an appropriate fund and appointed a committee to present plans for an immediate campaign.

"Be Careful"

Fate's Joke

Fireman Falls in Pole Well While Making Up His Bunk.

When a check is made of ironical accidents, this one will surely rank high.

To leap into the well at the firehouse and slide down the brass pole in a nonchalant one-handed fashion seems to be something that only firemen can do. All firemen apparently are equally adept at the feat and Private Hepburn E. Burton, 28, 203 Kennedy street northwest, is no exception.

After having hit the pole on many an occasion without a miss, Burton fell through the well at No. 22 Engine Company firehouse at 5700 Georgia avenue northwest, while making up his bunk. He was treated at Emergency Hospital for lacerations and bruises.

Employer Is Given Verdict for Injury

Storage Company Sued for Loss of Services After Worker Is Hurt.

A jury in the court of Justice Oscar R. Luhring yesterday awarded a $3,000 verdict to the Federal Storage Co., which had sued James M. Murphy for injuries sustained by an employe of the storage company when Murphy's car struck him.

Through Attorney H. L. McCormick, the storage company showed that Henry B. Hall, an estimator, was seriously hurt when Murphy's car struck him at Sheridan street and Georgia avenue northwest, August 24, 1929.

Compensation insurance protected the worker, and the law permitted the employer to sue for the "use and benefit" of the injured employe, so that all money received on a suit in excess of that paid the employe, should go to the employer.

Alleged Reckless Driver Held Under $1,000 Bail

Charged with reckless driving and driving while intoxicated, John Howard Jones, 217 Pennsylvania avenue northwest, was held on a $1,000 bond last night by Maryland State police for appearance in the Hyattsville police court tomorrow.

He was arrested on the Baltimore boulevard near Berwyn, Md., by Policeman M. D. Bohler, after a chase of about a mile.

Report to Be Pushed Before House Committee to Keep Senate Pace.

The District's 3.2 per cent beer bill may be taken from its subcommittee pigeon hole and pressed to a vote in the House District Committee at its Wednesday session, Chairman Mary T. Norton said last night.

Prospects of national beer legislation, following close on the heels of the House repeal vote tomorrow, led Mrs. Norton to announce her change in program.

She will confer immediately with Representative Vincent L. Palmisano (Democrat), Maryland, chairman of the Judiciary Subcommittee, which had laid the bill aside for the session, in the belief the national beer bill would be held up.

Senate leaders indicated yesterday that the Blaine national beer bill may be called up in the Senate around the middle of the week, and Senator John J. Blaine (Republican), Wisconsin, chairman of the Judiciary subcommittee, predicted action before March 4.

POST MODEL HOME ATTENDANCE GROWS

More Hundreds Visit Pleasing Dwelling Opened at 418 Ingraham St.

Attendance of visitors to The Washington Post model home at 418 Ingraham street northwest continues to mount by the hundreds. Daily this excellently built display house is pleasing many visitors and prospective home buyers. It is open for inspection daily and Sunday until 9 o'clock in the evening.

In the selection of the furnishings for The Washington Post model home Joseph B. McSherry, of 1724-26-28 H street northwest, was mindful of the fact that quality should predominate in this beautiful new home, "B. H. Gruver Built," the name which means quality.

The living room with its comfortable sofa, companion chair, Phyfe table and two guest chairs is balanced perfectly. Green, gold and rust comprise the color schemes. Solid mahogany tables and matched lamps are placed at each end of the sofa. To be exact, this is a comfortable and inviting room.

Living Room Mahogany.

The dining room is furnished with a most interesting group in mahogany—Duncan Phyfe table. Hepplewhite chairs, corner china cabinet, serpentine-front buffet and server. A gold-leaf mirror and handcarved clock complete the room. The hangings are of marquisette, draped with gold damask.

The breakfast room is furnished in maple and the drapes are in a colorful cretonne, which give a cheery effect.

One of the outstanding features of this delightful home is the spacious recreation room, which is furnished with an oak refectory table, six leather-seat chairs to match and buffet-type cabinet, which is very useful.

The den, or study, is furnished with a studio sofa, which can be converted into a full-size or twin bed, whichever one may desire. The modernistic ends placed at each end of the couch, with its attractive lamps, make an attractive setting.

Honey Maple Bedroom.

The master bedroom is furnished in honey maple. Poster bed, dresser, chest, vanity, bench and night stand make this room, with its green and gold lamps, an attractive boudoir.

The guest room is furnished in colonial mahogany. A full-size bed, large dresser, chest and night stand with an attractive boudoir chair complete this useful room.

This offering is of great significance to the home-buying public. Not only does the house fulfill, and even surpass, the requirements of a Washington Post model home, but the fact that it is "B. H. Gruver Built" commends it to the serious consideration of those who desire all that is good in a home.

Mr. Gruver has been a leading builder of quality homes for more than a quarter of a century, and has established entirely new standards of value. Taking advantage of lower building costs, he has produced substantial savings to the purchasers in these homes, surpassing the long-established standards of his organization.

Early Visit Advised.

The Washington Post model home is one of a group that will be sold rapidly, and it will be well to visit it early. Thrifty purchasers will realize that they can not afford not to buy these houses when they see such a value on the local market.

The Washington Post model home and those of the neighboring group are typical of the high quality of every "B. H. Gruver Built" home. They are of solid brick construction, have everything that could be desired in an excellent dwelling, and are built for permanence, convenience, beauty, comfort and the everlasting satisfaction of their purchasers.

The homes contain six and seven rooms, including a cozy recreation room, with stippled walls and special process water-proof floor, two ultra-modern baths, a kitchen as good and complete as in a $20,000 home. They have screened porches and cedar closets, terraced front yards with brick retaining walls. They also are equipped with garages, and are situatd on 158-foot lots.

Loans on Realty Show Gain Here

244 Are Made in January Aggregating Total $708,518.

Figures just compiled by William S. Quinter, secretary of the Building Association Council of the District of Columbia, show that building and loan is still making a substantial gain.

Total assets as of January 31, 1933, were $87,893,221. This was a net increase of $605,625 for January. Two hundred and forty-four new loans were made during the month, aggregating $708,518, and 1,067 new accounts were opened in building and loan associations last month.

This report proves that there is still money in circulation in Washington and that real estate loans are still available to the home owners.

Advisory Council Approves Designs

Capt. Hugh P. Oram, director of inspection, District of Columbia, reports that at the meeting of the Architects' Advisory Council, held last week, the following plans were given the rating of "approved":

Dwelling at 19 Longfellow street northeast, Clifton B. White, designer, V. H. Risler, owner; dwelling at 3301 Thirteenth street northeast, Louis de Ladurantaye, designer; Joseph P. Quinn, owner; dwelling at 4606 Forty-seventh street northwest, R. B. Carr, designer and owner; dwelling at 4801 Brandywine street northwest, H. S. Chandler, jr., designer; O. T. and W. A. Carr, owners.

INSTITUTE PLANNING RECOVERY PROGRAM

300 Building & Loan Leaders to Confer in Washington This Week.

A recovery program representing the opinion of 300 building and loan leaders will result from the midwinter conference of the American Savings, Building and Loan Institute in Washington tomorrow and Tuesday. This is the expectation voiced by Clarence T. Rice, Kansas City, Kans., president of the institute, in announcing that the final evening of the meet will be given over to a "Recovery Forum" when home financiers in attendance from all parts of the country will correlate the ideas presented at the two days' conference.

Cities and towns of all sizes will be represented and particular worth will attach to their conclusions because of the variety of financial experience included, Mr. Rice says.

The institute is the educational affiliate of the United States Building and Loan League, national organization of the $8,500,000,000 home finance and savings business carried on by 11,000 building and loan associations. Sessions of the conference will be addressed by league officials headed by Ward B. Whitlock, Springfield, Ill., president.

Delegates From Many Cities.

Delegates from Kansas City, Mo., Kansas City, Kans., Tacoma, Wash., Denver, St. Louis, Omaha, Topeka, Kans., Springfield, Mo., New York City, Houston, Shreveport, La., New Orleans, Los Angeles, Portland, Oreg., Tulsa, Okla., San Francisco, Stockton, Calif., Boston, Long Beach, Calif., Aberdeen, Wash., Atlantic City, Pittsburgh, Newark, N. J., Redlands, Calif., San Diego, Calif., Fullerton, Calif., Pomona, Calif., Oakland, Calif., Sacramento, Calif., San Jose, Calif, Santa Barbara, Calif., Louisville, Parsons, Kans., Durham, N. C., Springfield, Ill., Chicago, Fremont, Nebr., Detroit, Lansing, Mich., Waco, Tex., Indianapolis, and Youngstown, Ohio, will attend, since the institute has a chapter in each of these cities. A score of other prospective chapter cities will also send representatives.

The conference will place special emphasis upon two phases of the building and loan business, as well as upon general administrative methods for those institutions. These two will be accounting and 'the Federal Home Loan Bank system. The institute is planning to give a course on the new credit system, making details of its operation and loaning practices available to the 15,000 to 20,000 people working for the building and loan associations which retail Home Loan Bank funds. Action by the institute trustees who will hold their quarterly meeting at the conference tomorrow night is expected to give full sanction to this course of study, and to start machinery immediately to work whereby workers in the 40 chapter cities will have instruction in this timely business phase.

Four Principal Speakers.

Four of the principal speakers for the conference are directly connected with the new home-finance reserve system created by act of Congress last July. They are Morton Bodfish, formerly executive manager of the league and of its affiliate, the institute, and now a member of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board; Horace Russell, Atlanta attorney, recently appointed general counsel for the Federal board at Washington; George L. Bliss, of New York, former president of the institute, now executive vice president of the Newark Home Loan Bank, largest of the twelve units in the Federal system, and H T. Harward, of the examination department of the Federal board. Mr. Bodfish will be the banquet speaker Monday evening on the subject of 'Our Broadening Horizon." Mr. Russell will lead the four-hour forum on the Home Loan Bank System, the last afternoon, with Mr. Harward talking on one of the specialized angles of its operation. Mr. Bliss' subject will be "Our Future in Education for Business."

To Discuss Keeping Books.

The entire first afternoon will be devoted to the intricacies of keeping books for building and loan associations in 1933. The leader of the class in accounting will be Prof. John R. B. Byers, of the College of the City of New York, an instructor for three of the institute local chapters in the East. Allocation of dividends, use of contingent reserves, the relationship of various items in the balance sheet and the working together of building and loan and insurance plans will be points taken up.

Difference in terminology of building and loan associations in various sections of the country will be the basis of discussion at the feature luncheon on Tuesday, when the use of the term cooperative bank, savings and loan association, homestead association to designate these institutions, as well as the more familiar "building and loan" association, will be discussed.

Charles F. Axtmann, of Youngstown, Ohio, member of the second chapter of the institute ever to be established, back in 1922, will lead the discussions on general views of building and loan administration. Radio programs, newspaper advertising and collection letters will be stressed by various speakers under this heading.

National Park Air Route Carried 2,399

Great Falls, Mont. (U.P.).—A total of 2,399 passengers was carried by the National Parks Airways along its route from Salt Lake City, Utah, to Great Falls, according to the 1932 report of the company.

This total was but 50 less than that for 1931, it was said.

There were 2,028,600 pieces of air mail carried on the line during the year, approximately 500,000 less than in 1931. Air express shipments, however, made a startling increase from 35 packages in 1931 to 688 in 1932, partially due to lowered rates on such shipments.

Amateur Astronomer Builds Planetarium

St. Louis (U.P.).—Stuart O'Byrne, 27, amateur astronomer, has constructed a miniature planetarium here of paper, wood, wire and parts of an old flashlight.

Construction of the planetarium, modeled after the $1,000,000 Adler Planetarium in Chicago, took nearly two years. The model has a 3-foot half-dome into which a dozen persons can look at once. The planetarium shows the movement of the stars, planets, sun and moon in their proper position in relation to the time of the year and the latitude from which observed.

MODEL HOME OPEN IN "SPRING VALLEY"

Post's Exhibit Dwelling Is Located at 3641 49th Street Northwest.

Rarely has this publication presented to the home-loving public such a remarkably attractive exhibit of residential construction as that opening for inspection today, The Washington Post's newest model home, constructed and designed by W C. & A. N. Miller, realtors and builders of beautiful homes in their exquisite residential subdivision, Spring Valley. This particularly handsome exhibit dwelling is located at 3641 Forty-ninth street northwest.

A residence of the English cottage type, constructed of brick, stone and stucco, with touches of timber, the house is one designed to appeal to the smaller family, although its three bedrooms and two baths are of exceptional size, as may be seen from the accompanying plans.

The house is particularly home-like in appearance, low lines creating the charm that is especially desirable in a residence of this type.

Spacious Vestibule.

Typically English in design is the spacious vestibule with large coat closet, placed below the level of the hallway, and affording ample room for a console table.

The living room to the right of the hallway is given interest by the placement of windows and doors, a large group of windows at the far end of the room overlooking the garden front. Well-balanced doors give access to the sunroom and the open porch which faces the garden and is completely hidden from the street. Facing the window grouping which looks out on the garden and at the opposite end of the room, is the fireplace, its mantel of natural colored gumwood which has been used with excellent effect in the woodwork of the living room.

The dining room is placed to the left of the front hallway, with an attractive grouping of windows facing the street front and a large window at the side. A study of the plans will show the fine amount of wall space which this room affords.

A second hallway at the back of the house provides for access to the front door without the necessity of passing through the dining room. Opening from this hallway is an especially large lavatory and a clothes chute, a feature which will be appreciated by the homemaker. This chute runs from the second story to the laundry room in the basement.

The modern electric kitchen has a spacious breakfast nook which gives size to the room and offers a convenient place for hurried meals.

Fireplace Adds Charm.

The principal bedroom on the second floor has a private bath and shower. A fireplace adds to the comfort and charm of the room. The additional two bedrooms have a connecting bath and all three rooms are featured by exceptionally large closets, the master room having two closets.

The basement is equipped with every convenience for the comfort of the family and domestic help. A complete maid's suite of room and bath is provided here as well as laundry room, boiler room and two-car garage.

The residence is furnished with the cooperation of the Charles Gallery. The plans include many devices for comfort, the electric kitchen being planned and furnished with the assistance of the National Electric Supply Co. and the Potomac Electric Power Co. Telephone outlets have been placed where they will offer the maximum of convenience, this service being planned by the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. The installation of such outlets eliminates the necessity for visible wires in the room.

Civil War Cannon Fired After 67 Years

Canon City, Colo. (U.P.).—Old No 10 boomed out again recently for the first time in 67 years.

The old cannon, used by the Union forces during the Civil War, had been moved to the municipal building where it will be placed on a cement base, on the lawn.

The night after old No. 10 had been moved a crowd of boys gave it a touch of high life. A charge of powder was placed in the cannon and rammed home. A fuse was inserted in the old fuse hole and then a match, properly applied, started things moving.

Old No. 10 is a brass cannon and is the property of the local G. A. R. Post, No. 10.

PLANT PRODUCTION OF HOUSES IS URGED

Architects' Institute Backs Plan as Helping to Avoid Waste.

Mass production of small houses in factories is urged by the American Institute of Architects as a necessary measure to reduce housing costs and eliminate all wasteful and uneconomic features in construction.

In a resolution adopted by the board of directors of the institute, it is pointed out that the importance of lower building costs is overshadowed only by the maintenance of the character of the American home. The institute warns of the dangers of overstandardization and asserts that builders also have "the larger duty of making the home of the American citizen expressive of all the qualities that his citizenship implies."

By its action the institute recognizes the need for factory production of small houses and considers the effect of such a development on the architecture in the United States. The resolution, however, calls attention to the latent possibility that the individuality and character of American houses may be obliterated and urges the utmost caution in proceeding with mass production in housing along lines similar to those laid down for the automobile industry.

"The board of directors of the American Institute of Architects recognises fully the absolute necessity of the elimination of all waste and uneconomic features in the production of small houses for the purpose of reducing costs," the resolution said. "Therefore the board recognizes and commends proposals for mass or factory production of small houses.

"Nevertheless, attention is called to the danger of obliterating the individuality and character of the house, which is the home of the American family, and to the resultant effect upon the character of the family whose home it is.

"While cost is an important factor in home building, it must certainly be subservient to the larger duty of making the home of the American citizen expressive of all the qualities that his citizenship implies."

HIGH GRADE REALTY MANAGEMENT VITAL

Former President of Realtors Says Recent Experience Proves Its Needs.

The experience of the last two or three years is emphasizing to a new degree the need of high grade property management for income producing real estate, Leonard P. Reaume, Detroit, past president of the National Association of Real Estate Boards, pointed out in an address before the annual business meeting of the association here recently.

Mr. Reaume, vice president of the Detroit Trust Co., and head of its real estate department, which controls and manages all real estate owned by the Detroit Bankers Corporation, administers in excess of 10,000 parcels of properties. The corporation is said to be the third largest outside of New York.

Detailing methods through which his own company in the last year has been able to reduce the average per property expense for the operation of its real estate department by 44½ per cent, at the same time greatly increasing the efficiency of its services, Mr. Reaume emphasized the importance of maintaining improved property at its highest standard of efficiency to produce maximum income.

"While it is difficult to maintain properties up to standard, at the present time, due to difficulties in obtaining financial aid, it is imperative that every cent available be used for required maintenance of the property," Mr. Reaume said. "It is a mistake for owners of property at this time to take any money out of their real estate investment if that money is needed to keep the property up to date.

Neglect Brings Ruination.

"Nothing will bring about the ruination of a real estate investment more quickly than to neglect the property."

With general business conditions forcing families to "double up" to an unprecedented degree, with rents and all rental conditions profoundly affected, with many building expenses still at the old levels because they are beyond the owner's control with high assessments and high tax rates, approaching confiscation, the need of skilled and experienced management has become of first importance in preserving building income and the values of investment properties, he brought out.

"We find in many of our apartment house and office building operations that 60 per cent of the expenses are beyond the owner's control," Mr. Reaume said. "They are for such items as taxes, insurance, electricity, gas, depreciation and obsolescence. For example: An apartment house at 2611 Gladstone avenue, managed by us, showed total expenditures of $18,964.00 for the year 1932. The taxes insurance, water, electricity, gas and depreciation (at normal rate) for the year amounted to $12,098.00, or 63 per cent of the total expenditures.

Owners Fail as Managers.

"Most owners of investment property can not advantageously manage their own properties (although many of them think so)," he said, "primarily because most owners of real estate are engaged in other business or professional activities. Successful management of investment property can not be conducted as a side line, or as an after hour or Saturday afternoon job."

He quoted a survey of 112 apartment houses ranging in size from 17 to 112 apartments each, some of them under managing brokers and some managed by the owners. The survey showed, on the basis of dollar totals, operation by professional management brokers, after their compensation was deducted, yielded on the average 1½ per cent more than operation by owners.

On where to put money advantageously to keep property at high earning power, Mr. Reaume said:

"New hardware, new electric light fixtures, new tiling in bathrooms, lavatories, kitchens, &c., are very desirable and inexpensive at this time. In commercial buildings, redesigning of the hallways, new decorative schemes, new types of illumination, improve the atmosphere and are very pleasing to the tenants.

"On residence property good landscaping is very desirable. This is an item too frequently overlooked by the owners and managers. A hundred dollars spent for good landscaping is, in most cases, one of the best investments that can be made.

Quality of Occupancy.

"Many locations could be saved for desirable occupancy if the managers of the properties in the districts would induce the owners, through group action, to protect their holdings for the most desirable kind of occupany to which the neighborhood is suited. Many sections are permitted to deteriorate, that if properly restricted by joint or mutual private agreement could be protected for many years. Managing brokers must lead in these movements, primarily because of the fact that most owners of property are engaged in other commercial or professional activities, and they have little time, or not sufficient experience, to take care of these matters.

"I believe that managers of properties must increase their advertising budgets rather than decreasing them as a measure of economy. We must make customers, instead of waiting for them. We must sell our offerings to the right tenants.

"It has been our experience that the grouping of our advertising during the two major campaigns, spring and fall, is very effective. We have budgeted our advertising cost, and based our estimates at approximately 2 per cent of the annual rent loss of the vacancies in our properties. By distributing the cost of a full page advertisement among all the properties advertised, the cost per property has been nominal. Our advertisements produced as many as 247 inquiries in a single day. The average number of inquiries received daily during the month of September last year was 200. These inquiries were followed up until the inquirer was either secured as a tenant, or we were advised that he had decided to stay where he was, or found other accommodations that were satisfactory."

GEORGIAN PROJECT TO AID ARCHITECTS

Publication of Portraits of Historic Homes to Assist Unemployed.

A survey of 24 of the most important Georgian style mansions in the United States, all built prior to 1830, is announced by William Lawrence Bottomley, of New York, chairman of a special committee of the New York Chapter of the American Institute of Architects and the Architectural League of New York.

The project, which is self-liquidating, is designed to contribute to the relief of more than 2,000 unemployed draftsmen, according to Mr. Bottomley. The study, he declared, will incorporate photographs of exteriors and interiors on a large scale, in addition to exact measured drawings of the exteriors, special rooms, details, first-floor plans and garden plans.

"These," he said, "are being carefully drawn up by selected draftsmen under the direction of the architects' emergency committee, providing occupation and remuneration to many of those out of work at this time of distress."

Homes in Survey.

The survey includes the Gardner Ladd house, Portsmouth, N. H.; the Van Rensselaer house, Albany, N. Y.; Hyde Hall, Cooperstown, N. Y.; Mount Pleasant, Fairmont Park, Philadelphia; Whitehall, Maryland; Mount Vernon, George Washington's home, in Virginia; Mount Airy, Stratford, Va., and Drayton Hall, on the Ashley River, South Carolina.

Mr. Bottomley pointed out that publication of the survey by the architects' emergency committee under the name of "Great Georgian Houses of America" already had been assured through the advance subscription of more than 100 persons interested in the study.

"The entire profits," he added, "will be devoted to the relief of the unemployed draftsmen, of whom we have 2,000 drawn from every State in the Union. We feel that this volume should be in every library in the country as an illustration of the best of the Georgian period of architecture in this country.

Clear Picture of Times.

"The survey will correlate all of the different parts of each subject and give a very clear picture of life in those times. Not only photographs, showing the appearance of exteriors and interiors, but also details of them showing how the effects were accomplished, will be included. In addition there will be landscape settings showing roads, forecourts, terraces, gardens, parterres and general orientation.

"The project will be self-liquidating. The money realized from advance subscriptions will actually recompense architectural draftsmen in the making of the measured drawings."

In addition to Mr. Bottomley the committee includes Richard Henry Dana, jr., of New York; William Emerson, of Boston; R. T. H. Halsey, Julian Peabody, John Mead Howells, of New York; Lawrence Grant White, of New York; Fiske Kimball, director of the Pennsylvania Museum of Art, Philadelphia, and Everett V. Meeks, dean of the School of Fine Arts, Yale University, New Haven, Conn. Cornelius J. White, of New York, is secretary-treasurer of the committee.

Arrow and Spearhead Collecting Popular

Plymouth, Mass. (U.P.).—Indian arrow and spearhead collecting is a popular hobby here where the Pilgrims landed.

Collectors prowl around the historic countryside, eyes alert for the shape of a stone that might have been the favorite arrow-head or battleax of Massasoit, Samoset or some other chief long dead.

Outstanding among the collectors is Geoffrey D. Perrier, who has hunted stones for 40 years and who has gathered more than 300 exhibits.

Most of his spearheads are 4 to 7 inches long and are made of jasper, soft granite, white quartz and bone. The bone ones, however, will crumble if lifted.

Instruction at Navy Yard Is Praised by Capital Reservists.

By JACK STAHL.

The destroyer Goff arrived at the Washington Navy Yard on February 10 and will be docked at the navy yard for some time. A fine spirit of cooperation was displayed by the officers of the Goff and much valuable instruction was freely given. This week divisions are engaged in battle problems on the ship and the facilities offered by a destroyer for this important training are undeniably valuable and the group is fortunate in being able to secure its training in this manner.

Take-Offs and Landings

By HARRIS B. HULL

ON March 31, The Washington Post carried on its front page a story that negotiations were under way for Eastern Air Transport to acquire the assets of the Ludington Airlines. Thus would pass from the aviation picture, we said, the last great independent air line operating without benefit of a financial grant from the Government for the transportation of air mail.

When the story was published the writer received a number of letters and calls, some antagonistic and others merely disbelieving. Outstanding, and in many ways typical of these communications, was the inquiry of a member of Congress who asked if the published reports were true that not one independent air carrier could operate successfully why should the Government participate in the subsidization of the industry? Why not forget about aviation? he asked. Why subsidize another phase of transportation which simply takes business away from the established forms of transportation?

That question is the fundamental one of aviation today. Its answer is of prime importance to every one interested in transportation from the mechanic to the members of the National Transportation Committee in whose hands the future of our tangled systems of transports largely rests.

The debate and more specifically the action of the Senate recently in removing the air mail appropriation, although we believe it was actuated by political motives and these funds will be restored, does show that certain other members of Congress are in hearty and sincere accord with this particular congressional member's views.

And last week, in spite of the fact that reports had been circulated that the Ludington Airlines was a money-making proposition, the company changed hands to protect the interests of the owners. It could not go on without Government financial aid and it was apparent that none was forthcoming.

This consolidation, absorption, call it what you may, without a shadow of a doubt is strengthening in the minds of many people the views of our congressmen friend who months ago felt, talked and voted that Federal aid should be withdrawn.

Therefore, the fact having been pretty well established that an air line now can not profitably operate without aid, does it follow that we should give up the so-called subsidization of the aviation industry? Of course not. But we must give reasons.

First of all, the general opinion seems to have been rather widely disseminated, especially among those whose voices are heard most often on Capitol Hill, that the companies contracting with the Government for the carriage of air mail are functioning under a pure subsidy, that they return nothing to the United States Treasury. As has been stated in this column before, the members regularly refer to the $19,000,000 domestic airmail subsidy. As a matter of fact, the companies return roughly one-half of this in airmail stamps purchased.

Secondly, the amount of money being returned to the Government has increased some, and indications are that it will increase even further in better times to come. Further, the transportation of passengers by air has shown splendid results and improvement under adverse conditions. In this connection Representative Clyde Kelly has introduced a far-seeing piece of legislation which would help the companies bring closer this day of relative independence. It is unfortunate that the press of politics and appropriation bills make it impossible for this measure to be enacted at this session.

The above are the purely financial arguments, the arguments advanced under the general head of "aid to an infant industry." In addition to these we have the commercial arguments, and the oft-stated national-defense argument. The airplane speeds commerce to a tremendous extent, especially over the remote sections of this country and Latin America. The value of this to bankers and industrialists could be the subject of a special article.

To many of aviation's supporters the national defense alone justifies the maintenance of the industry. In view of the fact that it has been pretty well established that the next war will be fought to a considerable extent in the air, I am not sure that I am not listed among this group. To adequately protect our boundaries from foreign aggression we must keep up the industry which in an emergency would supply us with the necessary personnel and flying equipment.

An oft-used argument against aviation, particularly air mail, is that financial grants merely take business away from the railroads. Yet as a matter of fact, the Federal grants received by aviation can not compare with the early grants received by the rail companies, and aviation already shows better indications of being self-supporting at an earlier date than were the railroads.

The above facts are pretty well known to the students and friends of aviation. The remarks are addressed therefore to the average person who has not made any particular study of aeronautics and its underlying principles. And we might add that they are particularly addressed to any legislator who might chance over this column, who perhaps has concluded that all aviation executives are villains after hearing the testimony of some of his colleagues on Capitol Hill. Aviation's claim is a just one.

He may be reached either at 1333 F street northwest or room 237, Transportation Building.

Stocks Fluctuate Narrowly As Upturns Yield to Losses

List Closes Two-Tenths Off on Half-Day's Sale of 304,630 Shares.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Stock averages returned a minor net loss today after two hours of very leisurely trading.

In most instances fluctuations over the two hours were small and irregular, exceptions were to be found in a handful of rather prominent shares which appeared to be facing uncertainties as to dividends or earnings, but on the whole the trend was inconclusive.

Foreign gold currencies continued to work against the dollar, though gains were mostly smaller than yesterday's. A careful appraisal of the situation in Wall street banking quarters led to the belief that exchange speculators in Europe had again raised ugly and unfounded rumors concerning this country and were endeavoring to keep the pot boiling so that they could cover short commitments with substantial profits.

Some speculation occurred in silver futures, obviously based on current gossip as to silver's prospects, and there was an upward flurry in stocks of several companies which produce that metal.

Union Carbide tumbled two points on selling attributed to reports that the dividend might be changed. Consolidated Gas of New York resumed its decline to the extent of a point. The company's 1932 earnings are expected shortly and the forecasters have figured that the annual $4 payment was just about covered. So-called "wet" shares firmed but were less effervescent than on Friday.

Rails picked up a bit, fractional losses appearing in New York Central, Santa Fe, Baltimore & Ohio, Chesapeake & Ohio and Southern Pacific. Freight loadings rose 18,218 cars last week, and although the gain was somewhat larger than seasonal, larger fuel shipments, incident to the cold wave, were responsible.

Net losses in American Telephone, U. S. Steel, Westinghouse, Case, Loew's, American Tobacco "B", Eastman Kodak, Goodyear, Sears Roebuck, Texas Gulf Sulphur, Seaboard Oil and American Can averaged less than half a point. Earnings for the latter company in 1932 were equivalent to $3.26, or less than dividend requirements, compared with $5.11 in 1931. Du Pont, whose dividend meeting comes next Monday, was steady. Penick & Ford, U. S. Smelting, American Smelting, National Distillers, Crown Cork, Coca Cola and National Biscuit firmed. Sales totaled 304,630 shares.

Trade news at the week-end was colorless. In steel circles interest centers largely on the reported campaign to discourage price shading; actual advances have been made on a few items during the past fortnight, but the quotation structure is still spotty. Production schedules next week may be curtailed a bit here and there as automobile output begins to slacken. No railroad orders of consequence are in sight.

GOODS MARKET.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Cottons for spring dress wear were in better demand today. Determination of blanket prices for fall has been deferred indefinitely. Fancies in men's wear fabrics are selling more freely. Rayon yarn sales are less active. Burlaps are very quiet.

CURB DRIFTS LOWER IN LIGHTER TRADING

Narrow Price Loss Marks Dealing as Sales Drop to 60,000 Shares.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The curb market drifted irregularly lower in an extremely quiet week-end session today.

It was a narrow market, with many ordinarily active issues failing to appear on the tape. Most price changes were limited to small fractions. The turnover of 60,000 shares duplicated that of last Saturday.

The list firmed a little early, but eased off in the last hour. Electric Bond & Share common closed unchanged, after a small fractional gain, and 5 per cent preferred lost more than a point. United Gas preferred reacted 1¾, in response to ordering of a preferred dividend of 25 cents, against 87½ in the previous quarter. Commonwealth Edison lost a point, and American Gas & Electric, a small fraction.

In the gold mining group, Lake Shore and Hollinger, two of the larger Canadian companies, gained fractions. Oils held about steady. Indiana closed a shade higher. The market in industrials was extremely thin. A. O. Smith lost 1, and Dow Chemical 2, in a few odd-lot dealings. Ford of Canada "A" eased a fraction. Aluminum Co. closed a shade higher, and Novadel Agene gained a point.

Movement of Gold Turning Again to Europe's Coffers

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The international gold movement had been flowing in large volume to this country from Europe, and recently turned slightly in favor of foreign countries, was expected by bankers today to continue outward for a short time longer.

Withdrawals of the precious metal, they said, would be restricted in the case of many countries because of the fact that their dollar balances now in this market are not large. While the two-day decline of dollar exchange has helped to strengthen the position of foreign currencies in the New York market, it was said that any substantial offerings of European currencies met with comparatively little buying interest here. Unless foreign currencies can be sold in volume at a profit against the dollar, it was explained, it is difficult for foreign banks to acquire substantial gold balances in that way.

As an illustration, it was explained that it would be necessary at prevailing exchange rates to sell 25,000,000 French francs in order to create a $1,000,000 balance in New York which could be converted into gold. When offerings of large blocks of francs were made, it was found that buyers were relatively scarce. Consequently, resort to the exchange market as a means of building up gold balances for shipment to France proved difficult.

Inasmuch as France, some months ago, moved all but a small part of her gold balances from New York to Paris, it was believed unlikely that many large shipments would now be made, although it was reported that a few scattered consignments to Paris in the new future were not improbable. The franc was selling at a price high enough today to make it economical to ship gold to Paris in settlement of commercial and other transactions, in preference to employing the usual exchange channels for handling such operations.

The Bank of England announced today that it had purchased £3,851,908 of gold, or $18,720,276 at par of exchange. Indications that this purchase was made in the American market were contained in recent New York Federal Reserve Bank statements. Today's statement showed that $9,999,700 gold had been earmarked for foreign account, presumably the Bank of England. Yesterday, there was a similar increase in foreign earmark account, amounting to $10,909,800. The two figures totaled a little more than the amount of the purchase announced by the Bank of England.

Since Britain turned over $95,550,000 last December 15 to this country to apply on its war debt, the Bank of England has recaptured all but $5,000,000 of the golden treasure it then released. Most of this money came from the American gold market.

Other items in today's Federal Reserve Bank's gold statement showed little change of importance. There were no imports. There was, however, one export, consisting of $100,000 gold withdrawn for shipment to Holland.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—A membership on the New York Curb Exchange today sold for $26,500, off $3,500 from the previous transaction.

Store sales of the Grand Union Co. for the five weeks ended February 4 were $2,382,936 against $3,006,906 in the same 1932 period, a decrease of 20.7 per cent.

United Carbon Co. had 1932 net profit of $145,643 after inventory deduction, equal to 5 cents a common share. This compares with net loss of $397,769 in 1931. Carbon Black sales were 10 per cent above those of the previous year, while the company's natural gas business was the largest on record, exceeding that of 1931 by 24 per cent in volume and 26 per cent in dollars.

Kansas City Southern Railway reports January net income of $82,473 after taxes, compared with $191,144 in January, 1932.

Jewel Tea Co., Inc., reports sales for the four weeks ended January 28 at $772,885 compared with $899,925 for the corresponding period last year, a decrease of 14.12 per cent. Sales routes numbered 1,340 against 1,334 in 1932.

The Association of Cotton Textile Merchants of New York announced today that it had discontinued its monthly reports on production and sales of carded cotton cloths. This action results from the withdrawal of several important mills from participation in the statistical reports.

There were 35 unfavorable dividend changes during the past week compared with 23 in the previous period, Standard Statistics Co. reports. Favorable changes totaled 8 compared with 12.

New State and municipal financing scheduled for next week totals $10,766,300, says the Daily Bond Buyer. Montana will consider bids Thursday for a $4,500,000 issue of funding bonds, this being the largest item on the calendar.

Twenty-three ships with raw silk cargoes will dock at West Coast ports in March, says the Silk Association of America, Inc. Eleven will land at San Francisco, five at Los Angeles, four at Vancouver and three at Seattle.

Chase Harris Forbes Corporation and National City Co. today reported that the $25,000,000 offering of New York 4¾ per cent revenue bills had been sold.

Creditors of the bankrupt McCrory Stores Corporation have formed an advisory committee which has received claims exceeding $1,000,000, including those of employes and merchandise creditors. Frederick P. Wiley, for many years associated with the company, is chairman of the committee.

More than 55 per cent of the $5,000,000 General Refractories Co. two-year 5 per cent gold notes have been deposited under the refunding plan.

The Annalist index of wholesale commodity prices lost two-tenths of a point in the week ended February 14, standing at 81. Losses in steers, hogs and gasoline were largely responsible for the decline, offset in part by higher meat prices.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—COPPER—Quiet; electrolytic, spot 5; future, 5⅛.

BOND PRICES POINT TO RECOVERY MOVE

Loss of One-Tenth Recorded as Turnover Drops to $5,565,000.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Conditions in the bond market were tranquil today, with some evidences of further recovery from the jars felt earlier in the week.

U. S. Government issues were less freely offered and two or three Treasury loans escaped the monotony of the recent movement by rallying slightly. Prices of the rest were slightly shaded triflingly.

Domestic corporation loans were about as uneven in their movements as yesterday, but the list had an underlying firmness which to most traders betokened a drying up of the week's selling movements. Transactions amounted to $5,565,000, compared with $4,786,000 on the previous Saturday, and the average price was 1-10 of a point down.

Against an array of fractional gains, there were several soft spots in the rail group; these, however, reflected thin markets rather than extensive selling pressure. Similar conditions prevailed in the utility division, where some loans of good investment rating were obviously controlled by a temporary lack of bids near the market.

Foreign obligations generally were in better form as a result of cessation of selling in such groups as Germans and South Americans. Japanese issues continued depressed in the absence of developments to counteract the concern aroused over recent developments affecting that nation's foreign relations.

Dollar Is Stronger In Money Marts

Francs Advance Slightly; Pounds Decline; Paris Can Take Gold.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The dollar showed greater stability at the opening of the foreign exchange markets today. French francs, which on Thursday and Friday had bounded up more than a full point overnight, were up a small fraction. The British pound sterling declined a shade.

Foreign governments have relatively small balances in New York at the present time.

French francs have now advanced to a point where theoretically it is profitable to ship gold to Paris in settlement of commitments, but leading dealers noted that offerings of francs in sufficient volume to build up large dollar balances, which could in turn be converted into gold, met with only limited buying response. Consequently, they said, it would be difficult to get much gold for outshipment in that way.

Loadings, Power, Steel Indicate Rising Trends

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Statistics for the past week on freight car loadings, electric power production, and steel ingot output, indicated a slightly rising business tendency, according to Moody's index figures for these factors.

These indices are corrected for seasonal variation—that is, if each change in the actual reported loading or production amounted to the usual change for the period, the index itself would be unchanged.

The indices follow:

Steel Ingot Output Increases in Week

Business Develops in Zinc; Both Copper and Tin Hold Steady.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Further easiness developed in the zinc market this week under pressure from smelters, whose stocks are accumulating owing to limited specifications from consumers.

A less favorable statistical position, declines in ore quotations and increased production by smelters who are converting excess ore stocks into metal for storage were factors in causing a cautious attitude among buyers. However, demand was said to be developing slightly under the market.

Increase in Steel.

Efforts to stabilize finished steel quotations through removal of concessions under quoted levels on some products were occupying the attention of the steel trade.

In the meantime a further slight increase in steel ingot production to 20 per cent of capacity was reported as a result of expansion in miscellaneous buying and larger awards from automobile centers. Pig iron was quiet and unchanged.

Copper held steadily in the domestic market at 5 cents for electrolytic delivered in the Connecticut Valley. Moderate buying interest was reported, with consumers' supplies of metal said to be decreasing.

Prospects for further demand for copper wire for electric power distribution in Southern California created a more cheerful tone. Foreign buying, which had tapered off at recent advances, reappeared when export prices were later reduced.

Tin Holds Steady.

Tin held steady following slight declines early in the week. Moderate orders by consumers for immediate shipment were said to be causing steady decreases in available local supplies. Sustained tin plate production schedules had a sympathetic influence in checking pressure on the market.

Lead continued quiet but steady. Buying was limited principally to carload lots for immediate needs, but no selling pressure developed despite reports of increasing stocks in hands of smelters renewed reports of prospective curtailment and expectations that any improvement in demand for products would lead consumers to replenish depleted supplies, were said to have aided the tone.

HEAVY SELLING CUTS WHEAT VALUES GAIN

Market Closes ¼ Cent to Shade Lower; Corn and Oats Down.

Chicago, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Pertinacious selling that developed on wheat price upturns, and was attributed to government financed bodies, had a cumulative bearish effect today at the last.

Setbacks in wheat values were in the face of late reports dust storms in Kansas and despite rumors that Japan had been buying wheat, cotton and scrap iron, with China buying wheat from Australia. Comparative strength shown by the wheat market in absorbing government financed offerings, was looked upon in some quarters as an incentive to purchase.

Wheat closed unsettled at a shade to ¼ below yesterday's finish, corn, ¼ to ½ down; oats, at ⅛ to ¼ decline, and provisions unchanged to 5 cents up.

Weather Aids Values.

Unfavorable crop comments from various parts of domestic winter wheat territory gave an advancing trend to values during much of the day. It was contended by bulls that before long the market would receive decided upward impetus from damage reports, and the fact was stressed that weather had been such as to suggest further serious injury to wheat since last fall, when the crop condition was the lowest on record. Sharp watch in particular was kept on reports from soft winter wheat States, anxiety being shown lest market effects of crop damage in the hard wheat region would be emphasized by impairment of soft wheat.

Contributing somewhat to late setbacks in the price of wheat was disappointment that only a small export business was noted in messages from Winnipeg. European continental interests were said, however, to have bought future deliveries of Canadian wheat. There were also advices that more Canadian wheat had been disposed of so far this season for shipment abroad at the opening of lake navigation than has been the case for many years.

Corn and oats prices were weakened by large receipts of corn, 225 cars in Chicago today against 74 a week ago.

Provisions averaged a little higher owing to some improvement in demand for meats.

COTTON PRICES GAIN ON TRADE'S BUYING

May Closes at 6.21 as General Market Rises 3 to 6 Points.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—An early advance in cotton was followed by slight reactions, but week-end realizing and moderate Southern selling were absorbed by continued trade and commission house buying.

May contracts sold to 6.21, or 8 points net higher, eased off to 6.17 and closed at 6.18, with the general market closing steady, 3 to 6 points higher.

First prices showed advances of 3 to 9 points on a renewal trade demand, including some buying through houses with Liverpool, continental and Japanese connections. The market showed net advances of 6 to 10 points during the early trading, with March selling at 6.07 and July at 6.31, but later prices sagged 4 or 5 points from the best on the more active positions under week-end realizing. March liquidation was taken by the trade at a slight widening of the difference.

Reports from Washington that the crop-productions loans made by the Department of Agriculture this season would be contingent upon a reduction of 30 per cent in acreage were considered a factor on the early advance.

Liverpool cables made rather an irregular showing, with light hedge selling absorbed by trade calling and some scattering demand for the later months. The amount of cotton on shipboard awaiting clearance at the end of the week was estimated at 131,000, against 201,000 last year.

Additional details of yesterday's transactions included another lot of 40,000 bags of Puerto Rican for prompt shipment to a local refiner at 2.80 and 45,000 bags of Philippines for February-March shipment at 2.83 to an operator. Futures were easier under liquidation or realizing promoted by easier cables and the less active spot demand. Final prices showed net losses of 3 to 4 points. The recent sharp upturn had evidently weakened the technical position and the setback today was attributed more to profit taking than to any chance in underlying conditions. Approximate sales 15,850 tons. March closed 80; May, 84; July, 86; September, 90; December, 93, and January, 93. Refined was unchanged at 3.90 for fine granulated with a moderate inquiry reported.

Railway Supplies In Line for Boom

Purveyors Revive Hopes as Committee Urges Renovations.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Purveyors of materials and equipment to the railroads—one of the Nation's leading consumers of such products as steel, iron and lumber—have been spurred to new hope this week by the report of the national transportation committee.

While recommending the scrapping of much obsolete and duplicating equipment and urging cooperative economies which may result in the abandonment of thousands of miles of trackage and the actual running of fewer trains, the committee asserted that the transportation equipment should be brought up to date.

But the railways have been bending every effort to curtail their expenditures and have been making old equipment do, wherever possible. The American railroads, in fact, did not order one new locomotive in 1932.

Backward in Equipment.

"It can not be fairly said," the committee reported, "that railroad advance in applied science is abreast of that in other industrial fields."

In its emergency recommendations the committee urged revision of bankruptcy procedure to permit scaling down of some unwieldy capital structures. Thus, by reduction of fixed charges, these roads could use a larger portion of their revenues to renovate their equipment.

Furthermore, the committee recommended the repeal, retroactively, of the recapture clause. This clause of the transportation act of 1920, according to railroad authorities, has made railroad managements wary of making such profits as may have permitted more rapid improvement in service, trackage and rolling stock. Also, presumably, more prosperous carriers were content to go along with less efficient equipment.

Hesitant in Renovation.

The roads have been cool to suggestions that they take advantage of Reconstruction Finance Corporation credit to renovate their rolling stock, arguing that with the current volume of traffic, they actually have much more equipment in good repair than they can use.

But equipment makers insist that a large potential demand is being built up. William H. Woodin, chairman of the American Locomotive Co., in his annual report to stockholders, pointed out that railroads spent only about $1,200,000,000 in the maintenance of equipment in 1929, and only half that in 1932. "This serious curtailment," he said, "clearly indicates the potential demand which must be met as soon as any increase in traffic occurs."

Mr. Woodin explained that his company was preparing for a new day in transportation, continuing his program of research and development, feeling that the future development of the company is dependent upon ability to furnish thoroughly modern equipment and to anticipate the requirements of the rapidly changing transportation world.

Survey by Moody's.

A special survey of the railroad situation by Moody's points out that in the five years up to and including 1929, railroad expenditures for maintenance were large, so the beginning of the depression found equipment in excellent shape, but this authority expresses doubt that it will be possible to keep such expenditures at current low levels. "The probability is," it says, "that the next several years will witness an increase in maintenance charges, regardless of traffic."

500 ATTEND DINNER OF BANKING CHAPTER

F.N. Hall, Institute President, Addresses Banquet at Annual Session.

By THOMAS M. CAHILL.

Prompt enaction of even some of the beneficial legislation promised by the new political administration will assist materially in the restoration of business confidence, Frank N. Hall, St. Louis, president, American Institute of Banking, told more than 500 members and guests of Washington Chapter of the institute at its twenty-ninth annual banquet last night at the Willard Hotel.

The speaker, chief executive of the junior banking organization for training in that profession, said that bankers who prepared themselves by this adult education and who weather the storm of today would reap the harvest of the future.

Praising the local chapter as one of the outstanding of the institute, Mr. Hall in reviewing the work of the national organization said it now numbered 57,000 members, 380 study groups, 107 corresponding students and 234 organized chapters.

Richard A. Norris, an assistant cashier, Lincoln National Bank, and president of the local chapter, presided at the dinner and presented Aubrey O. Dooley, an assistant trust officer, Federal-American National Bank & Trust Co., and latest past president of the chapter, with the customary gold watch. The meeting was opened with an invocation by the Rev. George L. Farnham, pastor, Cleveland Park Congregational Church and a member of the local faculty of the institute.

BUSINESS HOPEFUL IN SPITE OF BANKING

Security Markets Weaken Under Difficulties, as Selling Prevails.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Encouraging observations on the state of trade were obscured this week by banking difficulties, and security markets weakened. Commodities, however, offered better resistance.

The Michigan moratorium presumably led to some "distress selling" on the New York Stock Exchange and also to sizeable offerings for short account. Shares bogged down Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday, piercing recent support levels and averaging into new low ground since last August, but on Friday prices hardened. Corporation bonds, which had been weak, also found footing somewhat steadier yesterday.

New York bankers, viewing the Michigan situation as local, were pleased by the calmness with which the commonwealth accepted an action that involved deposits of a billion and a half dollars; they likewise expressed satisfaction at the progress toward a return to normal conditions.

Money Markets Affected.

Repercussions were felt in money markets and rates stiffened slightly. With currency circulation up $149,000,000 to a record high of $5,854,000,000, incident to the special demand for funds, the New York Reserve Bank quickly acted to preserve the high degree of liquidity here, purchasing government securities and reducing its bill buying rate so as to absorb possible offerings of acceptances by commercial banks.

The dollar declined against foreign currencies, especially those on a gold basis. Reports from abroad attributed the flurry to nervousness over the banking news but more to the attempt on President-elect Roosevelt's life, though Wall street also thought it probable that professionals had not missed what they regarded as an opportunity to do a little bear speculating.

Meanwhile, favorable trends were visible on commercial horizons. Steel production improved to 20 per cent of capacity, the best since early November. Electric power output showed its first advance of the year over the preceding week. Cold weather helped not only car loadings but distribution of goods at wholesale and retail. Steadier commodity markets lightened the pessimism that had been generated by recent relapses in staple prices.

Rail Body's Report.

The transportation committee's report, dealing largely with railroad affairs, provided interesting discussion topics but drew little formal comment from rail executives. The committee's suggestions for eventual unification into a national system, for changes in operating and financial methods and in rate structures and for regulation of the railroads' competitors boiled down to the conclusion that reforms were needed and that some helpful steps could be taken immediately.

The week's dividend budget was headed by American Telephone which, in line with expectations, declared a regular payment. Wall street's enthusiasm over dividends not earned in full had long since waned, and the directors' action found the market unresponsive. Texas Gulf Sulphur and International Harvester cut their disbursements in half.

Rail shares held above their year's low, despite occasional selling, and their action, combined with absence of heavy liquidation, caused commission house spirits to brighten as the week drew to a close.

Late Rallies Trim Losses of Cotton

Declines Appear Earlier in Week, Laid to Bank Situation.

New York, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—The advances of the previous week were followed by rather sharp reactions in cotton here when business was resumed after the local holiday. No doubt the technical position had eased somewhat, and realizing or liquidation was stimulated by the unsettling influence of the banking news from Michigan. Increased support appeared as prices eased off to about the recent point of resistance. However, and after selling down to 6.00 for July, the market rallied on trade buying and covering.

The demand probably included some commission house or investment buying, and toward the end of the week houses with foreign connections were reported moderate buyers, with the rally extending to 6.34 for July contracts or within 8 points of the recent high level.

Reports from Washington that the Senate Agricultural committee had reported favorably the amended domestic allotment bill and that this as well as the Smith cotton relief bill were pending in the Senate, no doubt contributed to the confusion of sentiment noted early in the week. Except for evening-up of accounts, general business was probably restricted to some extent by uncertainty as to their future progress, while there was more or less nervousness resulting from recent banking developments and the attempt on the life of the President-elect.

Business picked up somewhat again toward the end of the week, when some Wall street and local or Western buying may have been influenced by a bullish interpretation of the passage of the prohibition repeal amendment by the Senate and renewed talk of possible inflationary measures which some coupled with the advance in exchange.

Brokers who sometimes act for the cooperative interests were credited with selling rather actively during the earlier part of the week, but later were reported buyers and there has been very little selling here for Southern account, according to local observers.

The report of the Census Bureau placing domestic consumption for January at 471,202 bales, against 434,728 last year, was about in line with expectations and without apparent effect on the market, while last week's activity in the cotton goods market has been followed by reports of a lull in the demand.

According to the New York Cotton Exchange service the amount of cotton remaining on plantations at the end of January was 2,883,000 bales, against 3,919,000 last year and 1,8[illegible],000 two years ago.

Greece Offers Art, Scenery And Climate to Tourists

American Dollar Now Goes Far in Ancient Land of Plato, Pericles, Persian Battles and Architecture; Frequent Sailings From New York.

By DARRELL PRESTON AUB.

That fabled mariner Ulysses guided his craft into ports which we shall visit today. We shall roam through towns and temples built by Pericles; walk where Socrates held discourse with his young men, where Plato taught and St. Paul preached. We shall see the Acropolis by moonlight and the sunsets flame over that historic land which cradled the Western world's civilization. We are about to visit Greece!

Throughout the ages a visit to Greece has been regarded as a pilgrimage to a holy shrine. Artists, poets, architects and sculptors have sought inspiration from the matchless ruins of Hellas.

But Greece has more than her ancient monuments. Those amazing relics are sufficient for many a spellbound wanderer, but even he is conscious of a background. From lonely Cape Sunion to the lovely Vale of Tempe and from Marathon to Olympia wonderful natural scenery is an essential part of the charm and lure of Greece.

Climate also plays its part. The clear blue skies and brilliant sunshine of Attica bring visitors to it in the wintertime as well as the year 'round, for Greece is semitropical in the south and temperate in its northern regions.

History, Art and Scenery.

History, art, scenery, climate. The attractions Greece offers to tourists are many and varied. Perhaps no other land possesses such multiplicity of interest. The country is itself one vast museum; on every hand are evidences of man's activity during countless generations.

There are even additional important considerations which make a visit to Greece right now a very wise move. The country has supended its gold standard, and the drachma (its monetary unit) is at the present writing about half cent in American money. The traveler going to Greece now with his funds in dollars is in a favorable position. For instance, the Hellenic Information Bureau of this city gives out the information that one United States dollars will buy:

Three 5-course dinners in one of the best restaurants in Athens, or a railroad ride of approximately 70 miles, or plus 13 cents, a room with private bath in a good hotel in Athens, including continental breakfast and municipal tax.

Athens is the natural center for tourists. Here we find hotels to suit our tastes and purses. Here we do much interesting sightseeing and from here also we take fascinating trips to interior places. We travel in comfort, too, for now that Greece is a republic and freed from centuries of domination, she has become quite modern and travel there is no longer difficult.

How do we get to Greece?

Sailing From New York.

There are direct sailings from New York by four different steamship lines, making about five or six ships leaving every month. Then one can go by express trains from important European cities. For instance, it is a 68-hour rail trip from Paris via the Simplon Express, which leaves daily. There are also very frequent sailings from Mediterranean, Adriatic and Black Sea ports. From Marseilles, for instance, or Genoa, Naples or Istanbul. And then there is air service from important European points.

We choose to go by steamer. The approach to Greece was by water 2,000 years ago and we follow trails of many races and peoples and armies. Persian, Roman, Barbarian, Byzantine, Crusader, Venetian and Turk have surged backward and forward over these same routes, an endless procession of color, romance nad mystery.

When we are still far out to sea we see the crown of Athens, the hill of the Acropolis, with its glorious ruins. Our ship brings us to Piraeus, the port built by Pericles and now the busiest in the Near East, from which we are whisked by motor to our hotel in Athens.

World-Famous Places.

Now we should decide just how long we can stay in the land of Hellas. We may wish to live here a few months, either in the capital city of Athens or in some smaller place, beautifully located scenically and offering much in mementoes of the glory that was Greece. However, no matter how short our stay in Greece is to be, there are certain places which we should visit in order to complete our picture of this great and ancient country. These places are in the close environment of Athens, and a five-day stay in this city would be sufficient to view them.

The first day we spend sightseeing in Athens, ancient and modern, and in visiting its world-famous places; the Acropolis on its commanding hill, the Temple of Jupiter, Mars Hill, Socrates' Prison and many other points of the bright star which is Athens.

The afternoon of the second day we drive out to Marathon. Here from the Soros, a memorial mound erected in the middle of the battlefield over the graves of fallen Greeks, is the best view of the battlefield on which 10,000 Greeks routed a Persian army of ten times that number.

This morning our private car starts out on a two-day excursion. The road traverses fine olive groves along the Sacred Way, passes the Convent of Daphni (with its beautiful Byzantine mosaics), which was built on the site of the Temple of Apollo and a shrine to Aphrodite, then follows the seashore through the Thriasian Plain to Eleusis. Here were celebrated each year the "Eleusinian mysteries"—one of the most important Athenian religious festivals. The great rectangular Hall of Initiation may still be seen standing within a walled precinct, approached through two successive marble gateways. The museum contains interesting archeological finds.

Ancient Commercial Center.

We must travel onward if we are to reach Nauplia before nightfall, for there we shall dine and sleep.

At Old Corinth we see the ruins of one of the important commercial centers of the ancient world. This site has been excavated during recent years by the American School of Classical Studies of Athens. The remains include a large portion of the old market place and the old springs and fountains give an excellent idea of the water works in the best Greek period.

Through the pleasant Argos Valley to Mycenae, the capital of Agamemnon, who led the famous expedition against Troy. On through Tiryns to Nauplia, a picturesque, medieval town dominated by a Venetian fortress.

The following morning we drive to Epidaurus. Inscribed records show that for many centuries invalids from all parts of the ancient Greek world came to this place to be cured. Many pilgrims also attended the annual festivals held here. We return to Nauplia for lunch, and then to Corinth and back to Athens.

It is now the fifth day and the last one for our little excursion in and around Athens. This afternoon we take a drive to Kephisia, Tatoi and St. Merkourios. Kephisia, situated on a spur of Mount Pentelikon, has always been a favored summer resort of the Athenians. Tatoi was the summer residence of the royal family until the establishment of the Greek republic in 1924, and St. Merkourios offers its beautiful views of the Plain of Marathon, the Straits of Euripos and the Bay of Aulis, where the Greek fleet gathered before sailing for Troy.

And now, if time permits, there is so much that is wondrous still to see in Greece—there is Sparta and Thessaly, Olympia and Patras and Macedonia and the Islands of Crete and Corfu. Next week we shall continue our travels in this glamorous part of the world.

After the concluding performance Saturday, the two comedies and two serious plays chosen to enter the finals will be announced. The finals will be held at 8:30 p. m., March 1, at McKinley High School.

Book and lyrics are by Mrs. Frederick E. Farrington, and the music was composed by Robert Ferguson, conductor of the Glee Club. Assisting in the production are Miss Dorothy Bryde and Miss Barbara Bramwell.

The Arts Club entry in the District one-act play tournament, "On the High Road, by Anton Chekov, will be given at the Arts Club on Thursday evening.

The play will be preceded by a talk on "How the Play Is Made," by J. Milnor Dorey. The Chekov play deals with Russian peasant life before the War. The cast includes some of Washington's most promising thespians.

Three one-act plays will be offered by the St. Gabriel Players next Monday night in the church hall on Webster street, near Grant Circle.

The plays are "The Lost Silk Hat," by Lord Dunsany; "Men, Women and Goats," by Charles O'Brien Kennedy, and "On the Air," by Howard Reid. The plays will be presented under the direction of Miss Kathleen Baker and Justin F. Winkle.

Final rehearsals are being held by members of All Souls' Unitarian Church for the vaudeville show to be presented Tuesday evening, February 21, in Pierce Hall.

It will be presented at Wardman Park Theater on Thursday and Friday evenings, March 16 and 17. The play has been hailed by critics here and abroad as the funniest since "Charlie's Aunt."

The Right Attitude

Taken from the Christian Science Monitor.

WITH the advancement of modern civilization to its present status, together with today's advantages in expediting progress, it may seem strange that much time and attention is given to extensive research work in an effort to look back to times long past, and to people of such antiquity that only archeological records of them remain. Civilization today, looking backward, finds many surprising and humbling facts about religion, art, science and education. Nothing of a personal nature can be known, yet what clear ideas are being gained as to the mental attitudes of those people who trod the earth ages ago!

Concrete customs, manners, fashions, all may change, but things abstract hold to certain defined standards. For example, those nations which have striven to maintain moral standards have been the most successful and enduring. And all truly great characters have been individuals whose discernment between right and wrong was so clear that they were able to hold a right attitude toward circumstances and toward other individuals, an attitude which is still vitally necessary.

The importance of holding to a right mental attitude is worth serious consideration. How many times unhappiness, disappointment, dismay, are the aftermath of some incident in which a wrong attitude was assumed! What peace, serenity, joy, is sure to follow a resisted temptation of that kind!

Affairs of business or of home, whether important or of little consequence, all need to be faced with the right attitude. How to do this is a question satisfactorily answered in Christian Science by demonstration. Everyone who has desired to be above pettiness, to overlook mistreatment, to give another the benefit of any doubt in dealings which arouse misgivings, has tested human endurance, reached its limit, felt its weakness and found it wanting at a time when most needed.

Christian Science teaches the truth about God and His spiritual creation, man; and, once man's relation to God is discerned, one's God-given ability to think and act rightly is also understood. This good is part of our heritage from God, which only waits to be recognized, claimed, and put into expression by us. Mary Baker Eddy, in referring to this great gift, said (Pulpit and Press, p. 3), "Know, then, that you possess sovereign power to think and act rightly, and that nothing can dispossess you of this heritage and trespass on Love." And Mrs. Eddy demonstrated this sovereign power to think and act rightly to an extent seldom equaled!

When the sinning woman was brought to Jesus, the whole situation was altered because of the right attitude manifested by Him. He did not condemn the woman. His impersonal judgment caused the accusers to take home to themselves the moral of the lesson and to go away in silence. A right attitude always blesses everyone concerned, and graciously helps to harmonize unhappy situations.

Perhaps some may think it is easy enough to have a right attitude when matters of business or of home need adjustment; but what about pain or sorrow? When severe trials come, they may wonder how one can hold to a right attitude, and how that will solve a problem of so serious a nature.

Any one who has suffered the extremes of pain or sorrow has learned how futile are words of comfort; how hopeless, how helpless, men are when in dire need, until thought reaches out for something more than human aid. How can any one expect to get rid of despair while thinking on a level with it, or hope to have true freedom while entertaining belief in and fear of a power apart from God? Once one learns how to let gratitude for present blessings lift thought above earth's shadows, and to hold thought there by counting one's blessings, one by one, until love for God, even more than an obligation, becomes a precious privilege, he will find this breaks the dream of pain or sorrow. And thus one finds oneself in the right mental attitude to praise God for His goodness to men, to be grateful for his spiritual ability to be conscious of God's presence and power.

The right attitude toward mankind is one of perpetual expectancy and appreciation of good. This exercises the ability to see the good in everything and everybody. The right attitude is lived when men make practical the truth of Mrs. Eddy's instruction "never to trespass mentally on individual rights; never to take away the rights, but only the wrongs of mankind" (No and Yes, p. 40).

Now, as in the past, a right attitude is vitally important. Equanimity, poise, justice, patience, charity toward all—these qualities express the true mental attitude. What a perfect example of true Christliness Jesus gave to the world when, in the midst of bitterest persecution and injustice, he prayed, "Father, forgive them; for they know not what they do!" What a glorious presentation of the right attitude toward God and men!

Starlings Pester New York City

Grant's Tomb and Metropolitan Museum Roosts for 100,000 Birds.

Special to The Washington Post.

New York, N. Y., Feb. 18.—Washington is not the only city suffering from that intolerable nuisance, starlingitis. Birds of that feather are flocking together here.

Each night flocks, varying in number from 20,000 to 100,000 birds, roost on Grant's Tomb, the Metropolitan Museum of Art and other famous buildings.

About the birds and the problem they create Alden H. Hadley, educational director of the National Audubon Society, said: "No general solution of the problem has been found."

Hunters Slay Bear That Terrorized Flocks

Lander, Wyo. (U.P.).—One large black bear will never again terrorize the flocks in this section.

Ed Myers, of Lander, along with Henry Hurtado, were hunting for a bear which had been ravaging their flock. Myer rounded a rock and came upon the bear face to face.

The bear charged and when it was but 10 feet away Myers raised his rifle and dropped the animal in his tracks.

Dean Sees Higher Pay As Slump Solution

St. Louis (U.P.).—Higher wages to return purchasing power of the masses will be the ultimate solution of the depression, Dr. Joseph Husslein, dean of the department of sociology at St. Louis University here believes.

Reorganization of the social order to allow a fair distribution of wealth and property among all the people must be effected before this or any other country returns to prosperity, Dr. Husslein believes.

Club Contains No Graduates.

Boston, (U.P.).—Although many members of the Massachusetts legislature are Harvard graduates, the Harvard Corridor Club is composed only of State legislators who never went to Harvard and always root for the visiting football team.

POST WANT-ADS PULL

...and Post Readers Bring Results to Post Advertisers

The want ad columns of The Washington Post provide a daily meeting place for those who WANT to BUY and those who WANT to SELL, and thus enable both parties to get immediate and direct results. Because The Post is a morning paper it also allows the desired transaction to be made upon the date of issue without awaiting the next day. This factor alone makes morning newspapers the natural medium for classified advertising and is reflected in the fact that the four leading newspapers in classified advertising, throughout the country, are morning newspapers.

No theory, however, no circulation figures nor other data, can take the place of the actual record of accomplishment. Post readers are people who have every conceivable want and the means to satisfy their desires. They are familiar with the directory of values that is represented by Post Want-Ads and look to these columns for their buying information. That is why—"POST WANT-ADS PULL"—and pull and pull. Not only in one or two classifications but for all types of merchandise or service. Not only on one day but on every day—throughout the week, the month and year!

WASHINGTON: SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1933. S

YOUNG DEMOCRATS MEET TO DISCUSS PLANS FOR THE INAUGURAL BALL

Social Leaders Practice Painting as Avocation

Count Szechenyi Uses Brush to While Away Convalescence; Mrs. Duncan Phillips Skilled in Picture Making, as Is Also Miss Coolidge.

By EVELYN PEYTON GORDON.

MANY people think that Washingtonians interest themselves only in things of the most social or political nature, and never know of the pleasure a great number find in developing and pursuing hitherto unrealized talents. Probably the most hilarious art exhibit in history took place recently in New York at the Wildenstein Galleries, where socially prominent persons gathered to view the artistic endeavors of their friends. The show was known as the "Would-Be Artists' Exhibition," an idea conceived by Miss Elsa Maxwell, drawing room delight of Paris and New York. Only the works of those who never before touched brush to canvas were displayed, and among those were works by Count Laszlo Szechenyi, Minister of Hungary.

Count Szechenyi had evolved a novel method of helping himself through the unutterably boring days of fretful convalescence that follow an attack of influenza. With the aid of a set of oils and brushes he started to carve himself a small career an as artist. One of his first productions was a picture of the view from his bedroom window as it appeared to him while he lay in bed, the window, a table with flowers on it and beyond that the sky.

Another was a reminiscence of days in the Florida Keys, intensely blue water, intensely blue sky and a single white cloud. One is of a Hungarian wheat field, a limitless expanse of gold. Several are in a more symbolical mood. There is Count Szechenyi's version of the depression, several curves of graduated blues with a golden sun above them. Which is a more encouraging idea than most of those given by starkly black charts in the finance sections of the Sunday newspapers. Then there is technocracy—geometrical figures in varied shades of brown from beige to very dark against a red-brown background.

Undoubtedly Mrs. Duncan Phillips takes her painting more seriously than as a means of amusing herself over the flu. She has been painting for a number of years and has a very individual style in her own rather lyric field. One of her best pictures hangs in the Phillips Gallery, several children playing in a garden that stretches into soft hills. Her sister, Mrs. Daniel Partridge 3d, has in her apartment paintings made during a trip in Ireland and also some that she did on her wedding trip in Bermuda. As they are nieces of Gifford Beale, the famous artist, it is more than natural that they should both be so interested in painting.

Miss Helen Coolidge, daughter of Senator and Mrs. Marcus Coolidge, is becoming very well known for her portraits. One of the most unusual is a self-portrait with the head of a leopard in the background and the eyes of the leopard are the same color and set in the same way as Miss Coolidge's own lovely eyes.

Another form of art which has been developed to a very fine purpose, is the scientific photography that Mr. John Keyes, son of Senator and Mrs. Henry Parkinson Keyes, has perfected. Young Mr. Keyes has accompanied his mother, well known as Frances Parkinson Keyes, writer, on many of her travels, has a collection of fine photographs which are being used to illustrate articles appearing in current magazines, one on "South American Cathedrals."

Senator and Mrs. Keyes are now members of the Washington colony established in Alexandria. Months ago they leased from Brig. Gen. and Mrs. John H. Russell their charming house on North Alfred street, and it is beginning to be home to them. The house has a history, but Mrs. Keyes has not, as yet, had time to delve into it.

The marriage of Princess Luba Obolensky, daughter of Prince and Princess Alexis Obolensky, to Prince Serge Gregory Troubetzkoy, son of the late Prince Gregory Troubetzkoy and the Princess Mary Troubetzkoy, will take place today in New York, where

FAT is the Mask that Hides Your Beauty

In youth, most all women are naturally endowed with beautiful figures—figures that could be retained throughout life. But because the body lacks a simple element necessary to turn food into energy, unsightly fat creeps over their lines, robbing them of beauty, "pep" and the magnetic attraction of slender lines.

How unnecessary! For science has found a simple way to control excess weight. That way is Marmola!

Marmola acts on the same principles that specialists use in treating cases of obesity. It supplies the element the body itself uses. Food goes into energy and vim instead of being stored as excess fat. That's why Marmola actually does take off weight—why most women usually say they feel better than they have felt in years when taking Marmola.

If you are overweight, you owe it to yourself to regain your youthful slenderness. You don't have to over-exercise or go on a starvation diet, although moderation helps, of course. All you do is take four tablets each day. And when your weight is where you want it, just stop.

Don't tolerate excess fat a day longer! Go to your druggist now and get Marmola. A book that you will find in every package gives full details.

SO THIS IS RENO

Letters of a Capital Society Divorcee to Her Mother

Dearest Mother: Yesterday was the first day I have missed writing you. I didn't feel very well and everything kept happening. Josephine McIntyre, daughter of a former ambassador, took me and several other girls who were coming in to see her, in to see a famous American novelist in his apartment down the hall. The poor man was sick and in his pajamas and he didn't know anything about this party and must have been not a little surprised to see all these pajamaed women come filing into his room. "So this is the fast Reno life," he kept saying. He is here to adjust the alimony situation with his first wife. He told us all about it and we told him all our troubles, and I think the newly arrived steel magnate whom we called in to give the novelist support as he was the only man, was also much amused at our pajamaed squad.

Tomorrow the novelist's second wife arrives. We are interested to meet her, too, as she is a distinguished person herself.

We hear all kinds of juicy reports of the night life of Reno, the road houses and Chinese gambling places. Since the Eastern newspapers telegraph to the Reno papers to "watch Mrs. So and So closely," the more prominent and well-known girls are a bit wary about going. But we are all going to take a chance and do the rounds at least once. It is part of one's Reno education.

I hope you are feeling better and not worrying about me. It will soon be over and then think how glad you will be ELIZABETH.

Seven New Films Distinguish Current Cinema Week

ON SEEKING A NEW TREND AND PAYING AN OLD DEBT

By NELSON B. BELL

OUT of New York's reception of two new plays this week—both of which have been viewed by large numbers of Washingtonians—should come a more or less definite impression of Broadway's attitude toward the theater.

While neither play will offer a fair test of whether or not informed theatrical taste is veering away from the bitingly realistic form of drama that has been in vogue so long, and correspondingly toward the romantic and the imaginative that remained in favor for years as a seemingly permanent relic of a mauve and modest Victorianism, there is a fair enough margin of difference between the two to indicate a trend.

The exhibits to which reference is made are Miss Tallulah Bankhead's slightly ribald "Forsaking All Others" and Miss Katharine Cornell's more substantial and thoughtful "Alien Corn."

The former, now flourishing in Boston, according to private advices, opens, I believe, in the vague vicinity of Broadway on Thursday evening of this week, unless eleventh-hour changes have been made in carefully formulated plans for the piece that rescues Miss Bankhead from the cinema and restores her to the living stage.

Miss Cornell, of course, takes her latest venture, fresh from its premiere in Baltimore last week, directly to her Belasco Theater in Gotham to reveal its nostalgic complexities to an eagerly expectant public tomorrow night.

In neither drama will Manhattan's intelligentsia perceive the blazing of any heretofore unbroken trail through unaccustomed fields to a new pattern either of thought or dramaturgic design.

"Forsaking All Others," rather, adheres closely to the path that has been worn bare these past few years. It is frank, utterly realistic, profane and, at times, a little mad.

"Alien Corn," on the other hand, while not new in any of its essential aspects, does offer a difference. Instead of setting out in quest of new and radical uses to which the commodities of the theater may profitably be put, it reverts to an older order and abandons the profanities, the lusts and the excesses of the modern school—or at least thinly veils their more startling outlines—in favor of the greater delicacy of inferential drama, principally concerned with genius' single-handed struggle against the deadly hypnosis of a fearful and a stultifying "security" in the midst of mediocrity.

The one is rendered in the Ben Hecht-Charles MacArthur-Noel Coward mood and manner—insofar as Edward Roberts and Frank Cavett, the authors, were able to manage it—the other, in the Henrik Ibsen-Leo Tolstoi-Henry Arthur Jones-Alfred Sutro milieu.

All of which is important only as it bears upon the increasingly frequent suggestion that the pendulum has begun its swing back from the extremes of candor, daring and license to the less inflammable and explosive idealism of those remote days of decorum when attendance at the theater did not, per se, imply a complete revelation of all the so-called mysteries of sex, an expert exposition of the most approved and popular forms of antisocialism or the comprehensive recitation of Billingsgate's sulphurous glossaries!

IT is not necessary to set up a conspiracy of silence with regard to the facts of life and the habitual behaviorism of those whose observance of the conventions is something less than consistently punctilious to restore the playhouse to some semblance of its former glory, but a slight modification of present practices in that general direction would not be wholly disastrous.

There are acts, and there is language, that one does not permit to intrude upon the sanctity of his home. There are blasphemous oaths for the utterance of which, in polite society, noses are punched and eyes are blacked. These are not the choicest tools of drama. Or, at least, they should not be. That, however, is precisely what they have pretended to become of late.

So commonplace has grown the flow of vile language through the present-day printing presses, turning out our most popular fiction, and across the footlights, illuminating our most popular plays, that blushes have pretty well burned themselves out and resentment has largely ceased to burst into flame at every recurrence of the assault upon our every finer sensibility and every accepted canon of common decency.

We are told that this is realism; that fiction and the drama are now only adapting to their uses those things which every normal person encounters in his everyday life, anyway, and so should have learned to accept as a clarifying sidelight upon the era in which we live.

There is dirt in the world, too, but civilization no longer lives in mud caves, nor yet in floorless tents. Filth, whether material or mental, has never been the nourishment upon which peoples or their arts have thrived.

This department holds no saintly brief for the lily-white Victorian in all of his ingenuous manifestations. Neither does it propose to acquiesce in any tacit admission that ribaldry excels romance, indecency surpasses idealism or blasphemy outweighs beauty as valid agencies for bringing about a widespread and authentic renaissance in the theater.

There is surer ground upon which to build, even if we have to backtrack to reach it.

* * * *

ANY contemplation of a possible return of the theater to the manners and customs of the years stretching back into the distance on the other side of the Great War, must summon to the mind of the habituated Washington amusement-seeker a vivid mental picture of a familiar figure identified with the playhouse for an unbroken period of almost 30 years in the National Capital, a personality whose influence has always been on the side of a clean stage, an honorable

Star Cast Makes Film Classic of A Homely Story

Writing a new chapter in the brief history of real all-star pictures, Fox Films drew upon the finest talent of Hollywood to bring Phil Stong's Literary Guild prize novel, "State Fair," to the screen. It is now playing at Loew's Palace Theater.

The cast chosen to portray the characters of the best-selling novel includes Janet Gaynor, Will Rogers, Lew Ayres, Sally Eilers, Norman Foster, Frank Craven, Louise Dresser and Victor Jory. There is also Blue Boy, 900 pounds of grand champion Hampshire boar.

In assembling this imposing array of stellar talent, Fox upset precedent in two ways. It went beyond its own studio contract roster to secure Ayres as Miss Gaynor's sweetheart, and it chose all of the stars to fit roles, rather than building parts to suit player personalities.

"State Fair," a story rich in romance and comedy, deals with the loves and adventures of a Middle Western farm family. Abel Frake, his wife, his daughter and son go to the State fair. There the children become involved in romances while the parents are competing for prizes.

Miss Gaynor is seen as a demure and lovely farm girl who learns about love from a fascinating young newspaper reporter. It is said to be her most appealing characterization since her unforgettable Diane of "Seventh Heaven."

Rogers plays Abel Frake, the hog-raising farmer. He specified his preference for the part, stating that he did not care about being the star of the picture, but he did want to play the farmer.

Ayres portrays the reporter who wins Miss Gaynor's heart, and Miss Eilers has her best role since "Bad Girl" as a beautiful aerialist who intrigues the fancy of Norman Foster, a farm boy of the story. Miss Dresser appears as Rogers' wife, Craven plays a philosophical country storekeeper.

"State Fair" is one of those rare films which must be seen. To pass it up is to miss motion picture entertainment at its very best

The added attractions on the same program are a Charlie Chase comedy, "Fallen Arches;" Mickey Mouse, "The Mad Doctor," and the weekly news flashes.

Weird Wells Tale And George Olsen Music at the Fox

George Olsen and his music, with Ethel Shutta, the "Voice With a Sparkle," are being headlined this week at Loew's Fox Theater, where they are appearing in person. George Olsen, with his radio-famed musical organization, has headlined such bills as "Kid Boots" "Sunny," Ziegfeld's "Follies," "Good News" and "Whoopee." Olsen has probably gained more of his fame through the National Broadcasting Co., with which he has had many contracts, than all the successful musical hits he appeared in on Broadway.

Ethel Shutta once criticized Olsen's music, and was told to speak to him about it. She did. Now she is Mrs. George Olsen. Miss Shutta is a radio personality, moving picture actress and musical comedy star.

The screen attraction on the same program is "Island of Lost Souls," from the story by H. G. Wells, with a cast headed by Charles Laughton, Leila Hyams, Richard Arlen, Bela Lugosi and "The Panther Woman"—Kathleen Burke, of Chicago, who won that title from among 60,000 competitors in a Nation-wide contest.

"Island of Lost Souls" is considered one of Wells' most weird and unusual stories. It revolves around a half-mad scientist, who has found surgical means of converting animals into men. The South Sea island on which he lives and works is peopled with beast-men he has created. Charles Laughton plays the role of the scientist in the picture.

Richard Arlen, a young American who has been shipwrecked, is marooned on the island. He is shocked at the creations of the doctor; is horrified beyond endurance when he discovers the "Panther Woman," a beauteous young girl, is merely another of the ex-animals. Aid ultimately reaches him when his fiancee arrived at the island in a chartered vessel. But their escape is cut off and their lives endangered when the beast-men revolt and turn on their creator and the other human beings on the island. The picture reaches a dramatic climax as they surround the doctor's laboratory, crying for blood.

Besides George Olsen and Ethel Shutta, the stage program consists of Ross Wyse, jr., and his parents in a comedy talking and dancing act; Al Mamaux, pitcher-singer-manager, former star ball player of the Brooklyn Dodgers, present manager of the Newark Bears Ball Team, who were International League pennant winners and the Honey Troupe, in "Acribatucs Par Excellence."

Joan Blondell Has Swell Opportunity As Boss Woman

Happiness rules the Earle Theater program this week with Joan Blondell, little wisecracking comedienne of the films, as the star of the screen attraction, "Blondie Johnson," and Gus Van, known to millions as "The Melody Man," headlining the joyous stage show with a program of character songs and stories for which he is famous the world over. Other acts on the stage bill are the Twelve Aristocrats, a dancing dozen with Rita DeLano, blues singer: Sidney Page and company; the Casting Campbells and Maxine Doyle.

In "Blondie Johnson," Joan has the role of a beautiful, but ruthless leader of a dozen men, a "fresh girl" whose glib wisecracks get her into all sorts of trouble but whose same wisecracks always manage to get her out of them again. It is said to be one of the most fascinating and refreshing pictures in which Miss Blondell has ever appeared. It is a new Joan Blondell in the matter of clothes, for the former indifferent dresser now makes her appearance in sixteen different gorgeous frocks.

Chester Morris is the target for her wisecracks, which come one right after another. The cast is completed by Allen Jenkins, Earle Foxe, Claire Dodd, Mae Busch and Toshia Mori.

The stage activities are headed by the popular Gus Van, formerly of the team of Van and Schenck and now known to millions of radio listeners as the star of various radio programs. He presents in his own inimitable style a group of character songs in some of the thirteen dialects which he has at his command.

The program also includes Fatty Arbuckle's latest Vitaphone two-reel comedy, "Buzzin' Around," in which he supplies a new bunch of laughs, assisted by Al St. John, a veteran at the art of laugh producing. Graham McNamee Newsreel and the Earle Orchestral prelude round out the bill.

In "Blondie Johnson," Joan Blondell appears in a different type of characterization from anything she has played for the screen before.

As the brilliant and beautiful leader of a big time band of criminals she gets her man, or rather men, in more ways than one. Some she raises to power, only to dethrone according to her whim, while those that get in her way she eliminates with startling finality. For Joan, as Blondie, is cold, hard-boiled, ruthless and merciless. She sways men to her will and rules them with an iron hand.

Mystery Comedy Is Transplanted From Stage to Columbia

The new policy of the Monday opening went into effect with "Trailing the Killer," which closes its engagement tonight, at Loew's Columbia Theater. "Whistling in the Dark," with Ernest Truex, who starred on Broadway and in leading cities of the country for 11 solid months in this mystery comedy, which critics hailed with delight as the play which poked fun at crook dramas, opens tomorrow.

Also prominent in the cast are Una Merkel, one of the screen's most popular comediennes; Edward Arnold, who was in the original stage cast with Truex; John Miljan, C Henry Gordon, Johnny Hines, Joseph Cawthorn, Nat Pendleton, Tenen Holtz and Marcelle Corday.

"Whistling in the Dark" is the story of a mystery novel author forced to devise a "perfect crime" for a band of crooks who plan to kill a man who is far away on a speeding train. Truex, as the author, concocts a deadly scheme, then finds a way of warning his victim without leaving the house in which he and Una Merkel are held captive. He performs both feats in the face of a warning that if he fails them, the crooks will take the life of both lovers.

Elliott Nugent, who shared in the direction of "The Mouthpiece" and "Life Begins," directed this production. He also made the adaptation from the stage play of Laurence Gross and Edward Childs Carpenter. Nugent was a popular stage comedian and playwright before coming to the screen as a writer and director.

In "Whistling in the Dark," Ernest Truex is making his first appearance in talking pictures, although he starred in films in several silent productions.

Mother of Many.

Julia Swayne Gordon, who plays Kate Smith's mother in "Hello, Everybody!" has mothered more than 200 screen stars. Miss Gordon, who entered pictures before David Ward Griffith, Mary Pickford, Mack Sennett and other pioneers, was a member of the Vitagraph Company cradle of such stars of two decades ago as Florence Turner, Maurice Costello, Edythe Storey, Arthur Johnson and Harry Morey.

BARRYMORE GOES WHIMSICAL IN COMEDY AT RKO-KEITH'S

There are comedians who long to play Hamlet—in fact, it's almost a distinguishing mark of a comedian to have a desire to interpret Shakespearean roles—but John Barrymore is a tragedian who is just as readily a comedian. A long series of starring roles has demonstrated that fact. Now comes his most recent motion picture with the star cast as a tremendously human and whimsical hero.

Those theatergoers who have followed John Barrymore's career will remember that he was first known for his comedy roles, and, though he startled audiences with the power of his performance in the tragic stage play, "Justice" and others, it was in such farce comedies as "Are You a Mason?" that he first appeared on the screen.

"Topaze" combines both a character and a comedy role, and those who selected the picture for Barrymore felt that here was something that was thoroughly in the star's element; that the simple, honest schoolmaster who eventually becomes a sophisticated egotist and a better trickster than those who tricked him in the first place, would constitute the ideal vehicle for Barrymore. It has proven just that. The capacity audiences both at Radio City, the world's largest theater, in New York, and now at our own RKO-Keith's, acclaim it as the best thing Barrymore has ever done.

"Topaze" was originally successful in Paris. Benn W. Levy translated the original by Marcel Pagnol, and it was a season's hit in New York with Frank Morgan playing the title role. Now it has been groomed for the talking screen by Ben Hecht and directed by Harry D'Arrast, master of light comedy, who made "Laughter" a remembered treat.

The title comes from the name of the leading character, Auguste Topaze. He is first seen as a too meek schoolmaster in a French school for boys, teaching that honesty is the best policy. But his scrupulous code loses him his job, and he blunders into a better one with a baron who needs an honest idiot in the racket of selling plain faucet water as a beneficial mineral water made from formula.

What happened to the ego of Topaze when he finds all his adages about truth given the lie, makes the story of "Topaze" not only delicious modern comedy, but a field for interesting characterization.

Paris is the background and RKO-Radio has given special attention to the settings. The supporting cast is headed by Myrna Loy, as the pretty coquette whose relations with the Baron, played by Reginald Mason, at first shock Topaze and then inspire him to steal her for himself.

The current Keith program is augmented by a short comedy, "Private Wives," featuring "Skeets" Gallagher and Walter Catlett; "Night of Romance," another of the screen organlogues that have met with ready approval at Keith's, and, of course, the Pathe News.

Tracy in Top Form As a Draft Dodger In Rialto Photoplay

As might be expected of Lee Tracy, he plays another unusual character—a draft dodger—in another unusual picture. This time it is "Private Jones," current at the Rialto Theater, and the Tracy role will rank with the notoriously famous reporter he essayed in "The Front Page."

Laughter, tears, wisecracks and a series of delightful surprise twists of plot characterize "Private Jones," marking it as a realistic epic of the war, mixing in a swift, suave fashion the hard, brittle tragedy and the smart, sophisticated comedy of the stupendous event in a pictorial vignette that ranks with "The Cock-Eyed World" and "What Price Glory?"

Russell Mack directed the production with a supporting cast that includes Walter Catlett, Emma Dunn, Berton Churchill, Russell Gleason, Ethel Clayton, the blonde Gloria Stuart, Donald Cook, Frank McHugh, Shirley Grey and Wallis Clark.

As an extra feature, the Rialto presents no less a celebrity than Walter Winchell in his first screen production, "I Know Everybody and Everybody's Racket."

In conclusion, the program presents Graham McNamee as the talking reporter in the last edition of the Universal News.

You probably remember him as the wisecracking reporter in "The Front Page" or again in "Louder, Please," or maybe later in "Washington Merry-Go-Round" and "Blessed Event," but the odds are great that you remember him well and with high praise for the enjoyment his work on the stage and on the screen has brought. For it is simply impossible to forget Lee Tracy.

And now, he's back; back in one of the smartest, gayest, yet, at the same time, most dramatic pictures of his career.

Laughs and tears surround the fast-moving, slick and cocky Tracy in "Private Jones," by Richard Schayer, which was first presented at the Hollywood Writers' Club and proved such a success that it was immediately rewritten as a screen play.

Tracy, now one of the most-sought-after of screen players, is one of Hollywood's great oddities. He insists on doing exactly what he wants to do—when and where, without explaining why. He is 34, single, has blond hair and blue eyes and lives with his mother. He calls her "Ma." He doesn't own a Rolls Royce and has few friends among the acting set. He likes newspaper people and pals with them. Most of them are quite ordinary—not men of reputation. He talks like one, snaps his fingers for emphasis, and has no use for people who high-hat the press. He refuses to be starred and won't sign a contract for more than two months. He likes to be interviewed and loves to see his name in print. But withal, he is not insufferably egotistical; rather is he affable and gay and very talkative.

He carries the wildest kind of detective yarns around with him on the studio settings and reads between scenes. He fishes and plays golf, but hasn't any taste for night clubs or cafes.

Comedy-Drama Is Vehicle for the Family of Arliss

George Arliss, who returns to the screen this week at Warner Bros.' Metropolitan Theater in "The King's Vacation," is again said to have a role which is perfectly suited to his unusual talents and has a vehicle that is believed to be the finest of all his screen productions.

"The King's Vacation," a Warner Bros. production, reported to be a happy combination of the light comedy of "The Millionaire" and the heavier drama of "Disraeli," is the story of a man who gives up his wife and child, his happiness in fact, when called unexpectedly to the throne and who, when peacefully deposed after 18 years of pomp and power, leaves his queen consort and returns to the scenes of his earlier happiness. What he finds has taken place there and the changes he observes in the people he knew and loved 18 years before, make an unusually pleasing and very modern comedy romance.

Adapted from the story by Ernest Pascal, author of "The Marriage Bed," it has in its cast Dick Powell, Mrs. George Arliss, Marjorie Gateson, Dudley Digges, O. P. Heggie, Patricia Ellis, Vernon Steele, James Bell and Maude Leslie.

A brilliant program of short-reel subjects supplements the feature. They include three Vitaphone short subjects which have been picked for their novelty and entertainment qualities. Ruth Etting is seen in "Bygones," a tender love story with song interludes presented in a novel manner. Edgar Bergen, famous ventriloquist of stage and screen, appears in "Africa Speaks," in which his dummy partner furnishes a laugh to every foot, and Bosco, the little rascal of the cartoon, closes the program in Vitaphone's newest song cartoon novelty, "Ride Him, Bosco."

George Arliss, who always surrounds himself with stage and screen players of exceptional merit, has what is unquestionably the finest cast of his screen career in "The King's Vacation."

Dudley Digges, who has one of the most important roles, is an actor and producer of world renown, having played stellar roles and produced plays both in America and abroad. O. P. Heggie is another player famous in all parts of the world, especially London, Australia and America. He was famous for his characterizations in such plays as "The School for Scandal," "Trelawney of the Wells," "Madame X," "She Stoops to Conquer," and "We Moderns." On the screen he has had important roles in "The Return of Dr. Fu Manchu," "The Woman Between," "East Lynn," and others.

Marjorie Gateson who plays the role of the other woman in the Arliss picture, is also a noted stage star, having been for years with Walter Damrosch and the Shuberts, making an exceptional hit in "Her Soldier Boy."

Florence Arliss, wife of the star, plays the role of his queen in "The King's Vacation." She has appeared with him twice before, in "Disraeli," and "The Millionaire." She was formerly a star on the London stage.

"The Green Pastures" Extends Its Stay at National

The Marc Connelly Biblical Allegory Enters Final Week

"The Green Pastures," Marc Connelly's 1930 Pulitzer prize play, continues to be the fascinating bill at the National Theater, entering upon its second and final week tomorrow night. The final performances will occur on Sunday, February 26, and the proceeds of that day will be donated to the educational and other uses of the Capital's most deserving Negro charities.

The play in its unfolding in the course of eighteen scenes depicts the rise and fall of mankind as viewed by the elemental plantation darky of the Old South.

"The Heavenly Choir," rendering stirring spirituals woven into the work as part of the action and providing continuity between scenes, contributes a unique musical setting which adds greatly to the diversity of appeal exerted by the offering.

The leading role, that of "de Lawd," is played by Richard B. Harrison. He had no previous experience in the theater prior to appearing in "The Green Pastures." He was an itinerant lecturer and dramatic reader on the Chautauqua circuit for 40 years, and was 65 years old when he made his stage debut. Since that occasion he has been awarded several honorary degrees and received the Spingarn medal, awarded annually to an outstanding Negro intellectual.

Daniel L. Haynes, Salem Tutt Whitney, Doe Doe Green, Alonzo Fenderson, George Randol, Susie Sutton, Mercedes Gilbert atnd Stanleigh Morrell play the chief supporting roles.

The cast totals more than 100, all of whom are Negroes.

Elaborate Program Planned to Hasten End of Prohibition

With a prohibition repeal victory "just around the corner," members of the Women's Organization for National Prohibition Reform are preparing for a gala evening of motion pictures and variety acts Tuesday night, February 21, at Wardman Park Hotel, at 8:30 o'clock. Funds realized will aid the campaign to secure ratification of prohibition repeal by conventions called in the States.

The principal feature of the repeal entertainment is the exclusive showing in Washington of the motion picture, "A Symphony in Two Flats," with Ivor Novello, the celebrated English star, in the leading role. An animated short-reel also will be shown.

Several men and women prominent in entertainment circles of Washington have contributed their services to the program. Included in the representation are Phil Lampkin, conductor of Loew's Fox Theater Orchestra, who will give a trumpet solo; Serge Abagoff, the sword dancer at the Troika Supper Club; two star acts from the Madrillon Restaurant; Sidney Diebold, violinist; six young women from the Virginia C. Hunter Studio of Dance; Edward Dawson and Miss Betty Baum, pianists; Charlie Wright, accordionist at the Club Michel.

A special committee is arranging the affair. Mrs. Arthur O'Brien is chairman, assisted by Mrs. James F. Mitchell, Mrs. John Caswell, jr. and Mrs. William Galbraith.

AT THE PLAY IN NEW YORK

By MARK BARRON.

NEW YORK, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—George White has produced a show that lures not a blush—that's the big news on Broadway today.

This dapper, diminutive manager, who made a fortune presenting scantily clothed beauties in his "Scandals," now is offering an operetta, "Melody," which hasn't a single risque moment.

"Melody" is one show which deserves the adjectives, "stupendous" and "colossal." Its cast boasts nearly a dozen singers who have worn the accolade of stardom, and they are supported by half a hundred of White's choicest blondes, brunettes and redheads.

THE plot of the musical concerns three generations, beginning in 1861 and ending in 1933. Edward Childs Carpenter has written a rambling romance that includes both Paris and New York in its scenes.

Sketchily, the story begins with Andree, a wealthy French girl, bidding farewell to her lover, an impoverished composer; these two roles being given to Evelyn Herbert and Everett Marshall, the latter recruited from the Metropolitan Opera.

The composer goes away to the wars in Africa to die, and Andree hopes that her unborn son will have his father's musical talents. She is disappointed when he proves to be a commercially minded youngster, but there is Andree's granddaughter to become a great musician.

MISS HERBERT performs the difficult task of playing first the young Andree, then later the aging mother and in the final scenes she plays the role of her own granddaughter.

The operetta is embroidered with one of Sigmund Romberg's finest scores, especially his "Roll of the Drum" and "I Am the Singer, You Are the Song."

In addition to Miss Herbert and Marshall, the score has the services of such well known singers as Walter Woolf, Jeanne Aubert, George Houston, Milton Douglas, Louise Kirtland and Hal Skelly.

Janet Richards.

Miss Janet Richards at her usual weekly "Review of Public Questions," tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock in the Willard Hotel, will select from the many and varied problems confronting our own country and the world at large, the issues that are most vital and provocative. This will include a discussion of the results to date from the galaxy of best minds appearing before the Senate Finance Committee; the proposed visit of Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald, and the British Debt Commision; the current installment, the continued story of Japan and the League of Nations, and other high lights of world interest.

ON SEEKING A NEW TREND

personnel and a stanch adherence to those wholesome qualities of virtue that through the antecedent years elevated the stage to the forefront of the arts.

So vigorously did this executive's personality impress itself upon the theatergoing public of this city that a spontaneous movement to pay honor to L. Stoddard Taylor, for almost a third of a century manager and guiding spirit of the Belasco Theater, standing there on Lafayette square a stark and silent monument to the heyday of the drama, has developed in the past few days.

Mr. Taylor's standing among the citizens of the Capital is unchallenged and unique. He is beloved and respected here, and throughout the Nation, for his devotion to the ideals of an unsullied stage, his unfailing courtesy to the public and his kindly consideration for the comfort and welfare of the players appearing under his managerial supervision.

The tribute which Washington wishes to pay Mr. Taylor has taken the form of a testimonial performance of Elmer Rice's comedy success, "Counsellor-at-Law," with Paul Muni, in the National Theater on Monday night, February 27. It is sponsored by officials of the Government, members of the Diplomatic Corps, prominent citizens of the Capital, distinguished representatives of the stage and the newspaper fraternity.

The executive committee is under the chairmanship of the Hon. William W. Bride and includes the names of 60 prominent Washingtonians, among them Mrs. William Howard Taft, widow of the late President and Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court; Joseph P. Tumulty, former secretary to President Woodrow Wilson; Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, widow of the late Speaker of the House, Nicholas Longworth; Mrs. Edward Beale McLean, Miss Mabel Boardman, Robert V. Fleming, Gilbert Grosvenor, Maj. Julius Peyser, Senator J. Hamilton Lewis, John Joy Edson and numerous others of comparable distinction.

William Harryman Rapley, owner of the National and dean of Washington theater managers, is executive secretary, and Hilleary G. Hoskinson, of the Riggs National Bank, treasurer.

The honorary committee of the profession boasts David Warfield as chairman and reads like a blue book of the American theater. Its members are, in addition to Mr. Warfield, Ethel Barrymore, Otis Skinner, Al Jolson, Janet Beecher, Alfred Lunt, Lynn Fontanne, Noel Coward, George M. Cohan, Grace George, Alice Brady, Peggy Wood, William Faversham, Fay Bainter, Ina Claire, Helen Hayes, Olive Wyndham, Pauline Lord, Walter Hampden, Beatrice Lillie, Eddie Cantor, Lenore Ulric, Beth Merrill, Constance Collier, Blanche Yurka, Lionel Barrymore, Jane Cowl, Tallulah Bankhead, George Arliss, Francine Larrimore, De Wolf Hopper and Lionel Atwill.

It should be a source of pride to every playgoer who ever set foot in a Washington theater to be privileged to contribute his presence at the National a week from tomorrow night to pay honor to a personage in the "profession" whose unswerving fidelity to his trust through three decades has inspired the confidence and won the friendship of so distinguished a list of national figures as now combine in this wholehearted gesture of sincere regard and deep affection.

IN the field of the cinema, as it discloses itself to those who sit and gaze at screens this week, a passion for change seems to have overtaken the most brilliant luminaries of inanimate drama.

The youngest Barrymore, in "Topaze," abandons the aggressiveness of former methods and becomes the whimsical and eccentric professor whose meekness overcometh all things. At the Rialto, Lee Tracy strikes a new stride as a draft-dodger who fought and fought and fought, but finally had to go to war anyway and become "Private Jones." The soft-voiced and placid Mr. Arliss becomes a king on the Metropolitan's silver sheet, and at the Earle, the vivacious Miss Joan Blondell is metamorphosed into the hard "head woman" of a tough band of gangsters.

Mr. Rogers, the philosopher-comedian, goes farmer in "State Fair," at the Palace; Ernest Truex experiences his first adventure in sound while "Whistling in the Dark," with Una Merkel, at the Columbia, and Charles Laughton provides the exception that proves the rule by going mad again in "The Island of Lost Souls," at Loew's Fox.

If from so variegated a galaxy a suitable weapon wherewith to slaughter an evening can not be found, diversity is of no avail and times indeed are hard!

BY devoting himself to writing plays, which, incidentally, have placed him in the ranks of America's foremost dramatists, Elmer Rice, author and producer of "Counsellor-at-Law," coming to the National for one week beginning Monday evening, February 27, with an extra performance on Sunday evening, March 5, with Paul Muni and original New York cast, has deprived the legal profession of a member it might well be proud of.

For Elmer Rice is a full-fledged member of the bar and might have been preparing briefs to appeal to juries and judges if he had not been swayed by greater ambition—that of being a playwright and appealing to vast audiences.

It is a point worthy of note that his first effort for the stage had a legal flavor.

When he was 20 years old, and a clerk in a law office, Rice wrote his first play. He was only 21 when he had the honor of seeing his brain child, "On Trial," produced and later the thrill of seeing his play a great success. The success of "On Trial" persuaded him to give up the law as a career and to devote himself exclusively to writing.

Rice is only 40 years old now, but in that double decade he has written and seen produced some 15 dramas and comedies, several of them exceedingly successful; all of them noteworthy. Perhaps the best known of his plays are the aforementioned "On Trial," "Street Scene," for which was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for the best American drama of 1929; "Adding Machine" and his current "Counsellor-at-Law," with Paul Muni in the title role, was an outstanding New York success for more than a year.

In all, four of his plays have legal titles—"On Trial," "It Is the Law," "For the Defense" and "Counsellor-at-Law."

COMING TO LOCAL STAGES

PAUL MUNI, who achieved wide national popularity through the sensational motion picture "I Am a Fugitive From a Chain Gang," will appear personally at the head of the original New York cast of Elmer Rice's comedy success, "Counsellor-at-Law," for one week, starting Monday, February 27, with an extra performance on Sunday evening, March 5, at the National Theater.

This will mark Muni's first personal tour in some years and will be the only visit he will make for over a year, as he is due back in Hollywood upon the completion of this tour. At the same time this engagement will serve as the local debut of Elmer Rice as a producing manager and "Counsellor-at-Law" will be the first play from the pen of this illustrious playwright since the presentation of his Pulitzer prize-winning play, "Street Scene."

"Counsellor-at-Law" in some respects follows the pattern of "Street Scene" in that its subject is treated somewhat in a panoramic manner, although its text is totally different from the earlier work, combining thrilling melodrama with an abundance of human comedy and pathos.

"Counsellor" deals with the rise of a Jewish lawyer from an obscure and impoverished background to social and professional heights. At the pinnacle of his career his high position and integrity are threatened by the revelation of a past misdeed which had been undertaken thoughtlessly as a humane act, but his own astute wisdom frees him from his difficulties and allows him to triumph over his professional rivals.

The story, while dealing with the career of a self-made lawyer, has the universal human qualities that might be applied to the business or professional life of almost any successful man.

Elmer Rice will present the play here with its original New York cast and production. Supporting Mr. Muni will be such artists as Jennie Moscowitz, Martin Wolfson, Conway Washburne, Anne Teeman, Regina Wallace, Angela Jacobs, Malka Kornstein, T. H. Manning, J. Hammond Dailey, Dorothy Day, Ned Glass, Sam Bonnell, Doris Underwood, Harry Mervis, Sue Moore and others. The play is in three acts and was staged, as well as written, by Mr. Rice.

FOR the week of inauguration, beginning with a matinee performance on Sunday, February 26, the Gayety Theater will present another of Manager Jimmie Lake's modernistic burlesque entertainments, with an especial eye to scenic and lighting effects as well as feminine beauty and funny comedians.

For the gala week that will witness the induction of another Chief Magistrate into the highest office within the gift of the people, Mr. Lake has planned a superlative entertainment, participated in by the current group of principals, augmented by stellar artists particularly engaged to make this the banner week of the entire season on Ninth street.

A New Importation And Reduced Scale Gayety Highlights

Opening at the Gayety Theater this afternoon for one week, Jimmy Lake announces another of his new and modern burlesk entertainments.

The ensuing week's show will be headed by the sensational Conchita, another new importation, ably assisted by the following artists: Lola Bartram, the Roberts sisters and Bee Keller.

The comedy is ably handled by "Bimbo" Davis, Joe Yule and Sammy Clark, Bob Sandberg and Sid Gold.

Due to the success of the reduction in prices on Sunday night, Manager Lake has decided to continue this policy for the balance of the season.

Oldest Orchestra Here in March in Farewell Concert

The oldest orchestra in the United States is announced for its "positively farewell appearance" on a Washington stage, March 7, at 4:45 p. m., at Constitution Hall. The New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra is to play this concert under the baton of the Italian genius, Arturo Toscanini, who, though in his seventies, still wields the most authoritative orchestral baton in the world today. This concert is presented under the management of T. Arthur Smith's Concert Bureau.

It seems completely fitting in such a farewell program under such a gifted leader, that Beethoven's massive "Third Symphony," so aptly named the "Eroica," is to dominate the program. In these days heroic measures are appropriate in music as well as other things.

It is equally appropriate that Toscanini, whose Wagnerian interpretations are especially notable, should place music from two of the master of Bayreuth's most famous operas on the second half of this program. The "Tannhauser" music and the prelude and love-death music from "Tristan und Isolde" will be an eloquent finale to the concert.

Loretta Ordered To Rest or Else Suffer Collapse

Loretta Young, featured in "Employees' Entrance," the First National picture which is now being nationally released, has been ordered by her family physician to rest for the next two weeks lest she be unable to accept her next assignment, expected within the fortnight.

Miss Young has made three pictures within the past three months, and her physician has advised the two-week rest to enable her to recuperate from the strain of such an unusual amount of work in so short a time.

Music Events.

A series of recitals by famous artists and other music events, to be held on Sundays during the 1933-34 season and with admission at popular prices, is being planned by C. C. Cappel, concert manager and manager of the National Symphony Orchestra.

This series will probably contain six concerts, Mr. Cappel states, spaced during the season so that they will combine effectively with the Sunday concert series of the orchestra to make a well-rounded season.

Mr. Cappel said recently, "Sunday would seem to be the logical day to hold such popular concerts. Washington is more interested in music than ever before, and I believe this healthy interest will continue to grow as the opportunity grows to hear the best in music at small cost."

ETHEL SHUTTA, galvanic singing comedienne, who adds her talents to those of George Olsen and his bandsmen in the headline position on this week's vaudeville bill at Loew's Fox Theater.

Unusual Works on Final Program of Visiting Symphony

The overture to an opera that nears its centenary and a passacaglia which is practically brand new will share honors, with Tschaikowsky's always popular "Fourth Symphony," on the final program here this season of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra. Issay Dobrowen, brilliant Russian, will conduct these works Tuesday night, February 28, at 8:45 o'clock, when the orchestra appears here under the management of T. Arthur Smith's Concert Bureau.

The opera which is being more or less fashionable these days by having a centenary fall at this time when centenaries are certainly being done—especially musically— is "Benvenuto Cellini," by Hector Berlioz. It was composed between 1834 and 1837 and had its premiere at the opera house in Paris September 10, 1838. It was composed when the worthy Berlioz was at the height of his creative powers, and although the whole opera was not warmly received, the overture which will be given by the Philadelphia Orchestra a week from Tuesday night, is reported by its composer in his memoirs as having "received exaggerated applause."

The modern work on this program—"Passacaglia," by Ludwig Irgens Jensen, is dedicated to Mr. Dobrowen.

Paderewski Defers His Local Concert To Last of March

Paderewski, the great Polish pianist, whose Washington concert at Constitution Hall was originally scheduled for Tuesday afternoon, February 21, at 4:30 o'clock, will not appear locally until Wednesday afternoon, March 22, at the same place and hour, according to a current announcement by Dorothy Hodgkin Dorsey, in charge of Wilson-Greene concert activities in Washington. The postponement, it is stated, is due to unavoidable changes in Paderewski's tour. This concert will be the final one of the Philharmonic course.

The postponement of Paderewski's concert, Mrs. Dorsey points out, leaves the Wilson-Greene February schedule blank, though the month of March will bring no less than three attractions to the Capital under that management.

Paderewski's concert will be the first, to be followed by the concert of Yehudi Menuhin, boy violinist, on Saturday evening, March 25, at 8:30 o'clock.

Gloria Swanson in One of Her Finest Is Cabled Message

"Perfect Understanding," Gloria Swanson's latest starring vehicle, is the best picture she has done since "The Trespasser," according to a cable received last week at the offices of United Artists from Arthur W. Kelly, vice president, who is now in Europe.

Mr. Kelly cabled that he had just seen a studio copy of the Swanson picture, and added: "Was tremendously surprised at quality and entertainment value of picture. Far better production than 'The Trespasser.' More entertainment and photographically splendid."

The cable concluded with the information that the print would be shipped to New York that week.

As previously announced, Miss Swanson's principal support in "Perfect Understanding" were Laurence Olivier, Genevieve Tobin, Sir Nigel Playfair, Nora Swinburne, John Halliday, Michael Farmer and Rosalinde Fuller.

New Juvenile.

William Mahlon, aged 9 days, can tell the world in years to come that he set a new record in earning his first dollar. He has been signed to enact a prominent role in "Luxury Liner" with George Brent, Zita Johann, Vivienne Osborne and Alice White.

Bennett Out.

Because of prolonged illness, Richard Bennett, father of Constance, Joan and Barbara Bennett, has been ordered by his physician to leave the cast of Marlene Dietrich's current film, "Song of Songs."

MUSIC AND MUSICIANS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

MUSIC will play a prominent part in the inauguration of President Roosevelt, especially in the grand concert on March 3, at Constitution Hall. At this concert the National Symphony Orchestra will share honors with Laurence Tibbett and Rosa Ponselle, Metropolitan opera stars, and Efram Zimbalist, the world famous violinist.

The proceeds from the concert will go to the benefit of the unemployed of the city.

Great care is being given the formulation of a well-knit program. Representatives of the artists have conferred on tentative material but as yet no numbers have been definitely announced.

President Hoover, Vice President Curtis, President-elect Roosevelt and Vice President-elect Garner have been invited.

The Washington Composers Club will be the guests of honor at the Arts Club on Tuesday evening when, among many other numbers, the first public performance of "The Argument," a humorous scherzo for oboe, bassoon and piano, composed by Siegfried Scharbeau, will be presented, and a first performance of three pieces written for the flute by J. Allen Finkel, will be given. These compositions have been dedicated to Domenico Isacone, who will play them.

The A. Cappella Choir, of the First Congregational Church, will sing today, "I Was Glad When They Said Unto Me," by Parry; "Glory and Honor and Laud," by Wood, and "Only Begotten Son," by Gretchaninoff. At the morning service Ruby Smith Stahl will give a soprano solo, "Whither Shall I Go From Thy Spirit?" by MacDermid. The organ selections to be played are "Andante Commoto," by Henriques; "Liebestraume," by Liszt; "Melody," by Dawes; "March Solennelle," by Gounod; "Finlandia," by Sibelius; "Andante Con Moto," from the "Fifth Symphony," of Beethoven; "Allegro Maestoso," by West.

An interesting costume recital of Portuguese and Philippine music will be presented Thursday evening at the clubhouse of the American Association of University Women by the Washington branch, Mrs. Martin A. Morrison, hostess.

The joint program of piano and vocal selections will be given by the following well known guest artists: Mme. Louise Coutinho and Mme. Camilo Osias, wife of the resident Commissioner Osias, of the Philippines. Mme. Osias will be assisted at the piano and in duets by her teacher, Eva Whitford Lovette.

The Welch Singers will present the program for the music hour at 4 o'clock today at the Downtown Center of the Y. W. C. A., with Daniel Morgan directing the group singing, accompanied by Miss Pearl A. Griffith. Wilfred Smith, tenor, will be the soloist. A talk will be given on "Impressions of Wales," by Miss Edith Williams. Others taking part in the program are Mrs. F. L. Harris and David J. Roberts.

The program for the hour of music at 5 p. m. today at the Y. W. C. A., Seventeenth and K streets, will be given by the Arlington Hall Glee Club, Mme. Regina Vicarino, director, and Marjorie Morrison, accompanist. The assisting soloists will be Jo Carter, Thelma Troxler, Frances Snipes and Gwendolyn Chamberlain. The public is cordially invited.

An entire group of the beautiful songs written by Robert Schumann as well as that composer's famous "Quintet for Piano and String Quartet in E Flat" will feature the second of the series of six benefit concerts to be presented under auspices of the Ten O'Clock Club, Edward S. Macdonald, director. This program will be given Tuesday at 8:30 p. m. at the Washington Club, Seventeenth at K streets northwest.

The artists giving their services at this time are Robert Frederick Freund, barytone, with William Smith as accompanist; Emerson Meyers, pianist, and the Washington String Quartet, Milton Schwartz and Paul Brightenburg, violins; George Wargo, viola, and Sidney Hamer, violoncello. Helen Fetter Cook will introduce the artists and give a few program notes informally.

A program of music of George Washington's time will be played at All Souls' Church (Unitarian), Sixteenth and Harvard streets, this afternoon by Lewis Corning Atwater, organist. Mr. Atwater will be assisted by Charles Trowbridge Tittmann, bass, who will sing "The Way-Worn Traveler," by Samuel Arnold, and "My Days Have Been So Wondrous Free," by Francis Hopkinson.

The junior department of the District of Columbia Federation of Music Clubs will give its third concert this winter Saturday at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the Department of the Interior, F street between eighteenth and nineteenth streets northwest. Pupils of the following teachers are taking part: Thelma Callahan, Flora Clayton, Mme. Louise Coutinho, Daisy Fickenscher, Mary E. Gresham, Mrs. Charles V. Imlay, Mrs. Albert N. Jones, Esther Linkins, Evelyn Sewall Mayers, Mrs. Sarah A. Tacker, Etta Schmid Wells, Helen Campbell Williams.

Miss Inez Becker, violinist, and Mrs. Mary Izant Couch, pianist, will play the Cesar Franck sonata for violin and piano during the music hour at the Women's City Club on Thursday evening at 8 o'clock. Mrs. Couch will also discuss the coming programs of the National Symphony Orchestra.

The International Art Forum announces the last of the series of six musical lectures to be on "Benvenuto Cellini and the Italian Renaissance" at the Washington Club, 1010 Seventeenth street, Saturday, at 4 o'clock. The lecturer will be Aldo Raffa, director of public speaking and debating at the Georgetown University School of Foreign Service. In his lecture Mr. Raffa will treat Cellini as the symbol of an epoch and will contrast the Renaissance with the twentieth century.

The musical portion of the program will be rendered by Mme. Amelia Conti, many seasons first harpist of the Chicago Civic Opera; Abilio Martins, violinist, and Alberto Martins, cellist, who will play "Nina," by Pergolesi. Miss Clelia Fioravanti, mezzo-soprano, who recently appeared in concernt here with Tito Schipa, will sing.

Imagination and color, potent factors in the composition of music, will be explained and illustrated by Hans Kindler, conductor of the National Symphony Orchestra, at the young people's concert to be given in Central High School Auditorium tomorrow morning at 11 o'clock.

Dr. Kindler has built his program around the theme, "Symphonic and Other Music." It will include: Fifth Symphony (first movement) (Schubert), "Valse Triste" (Sibelius), "The Cave of the Mountain King" (Grieg); songs, "Charlie Is My Darling" and "Santa Lucia" and "Capriccio Espagnol" (Rimsky-Korsakoff).

ART AND ARTISTS IN WASHINGTON

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

UNRESTRAINED by rule of thumb of art exhibitions a high note of modern freedom of thoughts and selection will be expressed in the 1933 Inaugural Exposition of the National Society of Independent Artists February 27 to March 11 at Transportation Building. The feature will be that it will be no jury show. Not only will the pictures of the members be hung without the usual jury, but the public will be asked to vote on the most popular picture. Also a vote will be taken on the most unpopular one. Among the patrons for this exhibit are Gen. and Mrs. Herbert Crosby, Dean and Mrs. Henry Grattan Doyle, Gen. and Mrs. J. W. Dewitt, Carl Walthers, of Baltimore; Col. Edmund S. Sayer and Dr. Hans Kindler.

An exhibition of oil paintings, pastels, water colors and prints by Washington artists opened this week at the Northeast branch of the Public Library at Maryland and Seventh street northeast. This is the first exhibition in the new building, and is loaned and arranged for by the Art League of Washington. The works were selected by Dr. Bowerman, of the Public Library, from members' and consigned paintings at the Art League.

The Art League of Washington is exhibiting groups of paintings by students in the Children's Art School, under the direction of Margaret Casey. These children, aged from 8 to 12, are led to paint just as consistently and thoroughly as adult students would.

THE art department of the King-Smith Studio-School, under the direction of C. Law Watkins, is holding its second exhibition of the year this afternoon at the studio, 1751 New Hampshire avenue.

The exhibit comprises work in portrait, still life and life drawings from the painting and drawing class, designs for materials and dresses from Ada Klein Peter's class of costume illustration, and small sculpture from Vicken Von Post Totten's class. During the afternoon Mr. Watkins will speak on the work of Giotto.

Mrs. Florence C. Estabrook, artist in oils and water color, will be the hostess at the District of Columbia League of American Pen Women at an exhibition tea today from 2 to 6 o'clock in the studio at 1706 L street northwest.

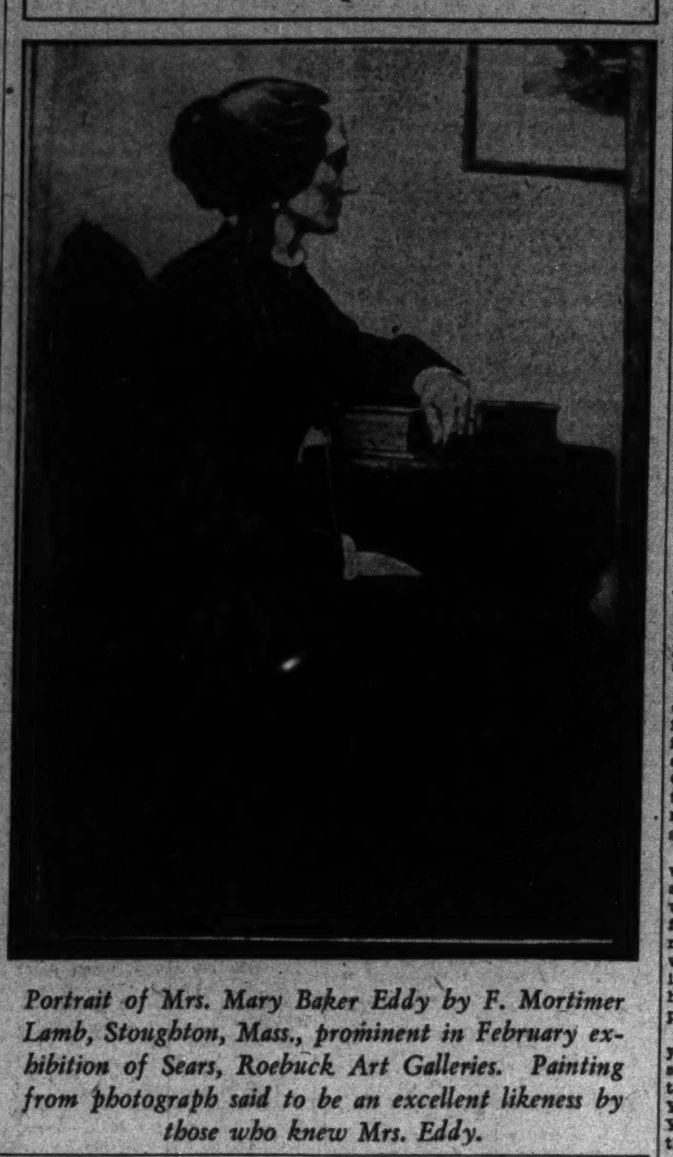
Mrs. Estabrook has studied with some of the best artists in New York, among them Charles Warren Eaton and Shurtleff. In Boston, she was a student in the Boston Art Museum. Her pictures have, many times, won first prizes. Many of her best pictures were done in Asheville, N. C., where she lived for 32 years. Mrs. Estabrook invites all art and nature lovers, not only to her tea, but on each afternoon to March 4, in the studio from 2 to 6 o'clock.

A WEEK remains in which the two contrasting exhibitions of paintings by Washington artists may be seen. Interest was heightened this year in the Society of Washington's artists' show at Corcoran by an exhibition of the rejected paintings at the Art League. Here now is the answer to a problem that has caused strife for many years—Just what does a large jury reject? The Art League show was not justified as a revolt or protest; in fact, many members and instructors at the league are represented at the society show of Washington by two artists. The "Salon des Refusees," as the show of rejected work is called, an opportunity to judge the jury and to permit additional space when the society was limited to one gallery this year at Corcoran instead of the customary two. At the Art League galleries, at 2111 Bancroft place, this theory may be judged, as many visitors to both the society show and "Salon des Refusees." In justification to the Society of Washington artists, it must be noted that they selected the cream of the offerings. Obviously favoritism and prejudice did not enter the judgment, for here are many paintings by members of the society, while the regular show included many previously unheard-of artists. In more cases the lack of space at Corcoran clearly resulted in directly choosing the smartest of artists 'offerings, so that by that means more might be included.

Several paintings are so important that they must be given special notice. Beulah Weaver's "Barber Shop" is a powerful record of contemporary life, and has a distinctive and individual treatment. Gladys Nelson Smith's portrait of an old woman, Sewell Johnson's study of a tanned, long-legged child, De Graffenried Wooley's portrait of a naval officer, Conrad Lubnau's figure study and Arcadia Herrman's large decorative study of a young girl, all are worthy of being shown in the best exhibitions in the country.

And in each case, the above mentioned artists are represented with smaller, less important canvases at the Corcoran show. The paintings in the "Salon des Refusees" by Clara Saunders, Lucia Hollerith, A. H. O. Rolle, Jessie Baker, Margaret Yard, Mary LaFollette and Ruth Porter Ward are unquestionably as good as those selected by the society jury. This is to be expected, however, when we realize that so many painters save their two or three best results of the year's work for their annual show. Landscapes by Angela Hurd, S. M. Walter, Blanche Stanley, Jawne Allen, W. E. Dye, Alice Acheson and John DeWitt are competently and interestingly painted.

"The Inspiration"



Portrait of Mrs. Mary Baker Eddy by F. Mortimer Lamb, Stoughton, Mass., prominent in February exhibition of Sears, Roebuck Art Galleries. Painting from photograph said to be an excellent likeness by those who knew Mrs. Eddy.

P. E. O.

"The State of Virginia" was the topic discussed at the last meeting of Chapter H, P. E. O., held at the home of Mrs. C. G. Cornelson, at Tilden Gardens. Miss Anna Slaughter presented an account of an incident out of the early Colonial Virginia history entitled, "A Forlorn Hope." Mrs. Cornelson read a prize poem written by her sister, Laura Turner Roper, "The King's Highway."

Daughters of Isabella

The monthly meeting of the District Circle No. 178, Daughters of Isabella, was held Monday at the Washington Club, Mrs. Annie Wall, regent, presiding. It was voted to donate a set of vestments to Father Francis Hurney, pastor of the Immaculate Conception Church. Miss Virginia Offutt is chairman of the committee to effect this

WHAT TODAY MEANS TO YOU

By MARY BLAKE

"PISCES."

IF February 19 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 11 a. m. to 12:15 p. m., from 5 p. m. to 6 p. m. and from 10:15 p. m. to 11 p. m. The danger periods are from 7:30 a. m. to 9 a. m. and from 2 p. m. to 3 p. m.

You will quite likely find it difficult to concentrate on this date, to focus your mind on any one thing for any period of time. People generally will be readily distracted. Gatherings of any magnitude will tend to be noisy and restless. You may encounter stormy waters in the sea of matrimony.

The child born on this February 19 will not be the one to remain quietly and modestly in the background. You will find the child possessed of a very friendly nature and a desire to know many people. He will make friends wherever he goes. The child will be inclined to be noisy and rough and he will be a great talker. Do not expect him to be able to keep a secret.

If February 19 is your birthday, you are a thoroughly dependable person. You can be counted on to "come through" under any circumstances. You readily assume responsibilities. You like to have a free hand in anything that you undertake. You have a splendid memory for facts and figures, and you seem never to be at a loss to call a person by name or to be able to recall very much in detail the circumstances under which you met them. People are often flattered by this seemingly special notice.

Born on February 19, to the casual observer you do not give the appearance of being a very active or alert person; you go about your work rather nonchalantly. Regardless of the atmosphere you create, you undoubtedly see and hear more than does the average person, and you get your work done, and thoroughly, too. You are a well defined person, nothing half-way about you at all; one always knows just exactly where he stands with you. You are quick to form strong likes and dislikes. Once your mind is made up about a person, you seldom reverse your stand. You either accept or reject people as you meet them, but you are a good judge of character and seldom do you misjudge anyone. Men and women born on this date, usually are happily married and enjoy a comfortable home existence. The women seem to know instinctively all that is requisite to the raising and care of children.

BOOKS AND AUTHORS

By ELISABETH E. POE.

JUDGING from the steady flow of books which have appeared since the New Year, the publishers have taken hope and are facing the depression with high courage and the determination to uphold the standards of authorship and literature in making their plans for 1934. The new outlets discovered for selling, such as drug stores and other public service businesses, have increased the volume of sales to such an extent that these avenues are taken into serious consideration in figuring the size of editions of potential best sellers—the fond hope of every publisher.

Washington authors continue to be counted among the recent publications and their work appears in varied fields of literature. It is to be noted, however, that generally speaking, fiction is not the favorite medium of local authors. Their tastes appear more along the line of biography, essays, poetry and technical books.

Washington is reading with absorbing interest the series appearing in the Ladies' Home Journal by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth (Alice Roosevelt Longworth) under the title "Some Reminiscences." It is a vivid portrayal, arresting in its understanding of the political and social scene in the National Capital, and told with the engaging frankness that is a family trait.

The present installment deals with the first years of the Taft administration. In view of the impending change of administration, it is of particular note how Mrs. Longworth succinctly and yet graphically disposes of the transition from Roosevelt to Taft.

Under the subhead "Mr. Taft's Inauguration Day," she writes:

"The Tafts spent the night of the 3d of March at the White House. The Cowles, Mabel Boardman, Isabella Hagner, and I think Archie Butt, Nick and I and a few, including the Roots, were at dinner. It was not a cheerful dinner; Mr. Root especially was in very low spirits. Some of us were perfectly sure that we saw tears drop into his soup.

"When we went upstairs to the library, I looked out of the window and turning to those about the room said, 'It's snowing,' in a voice that I fear did not indicate regret at the prospect of a wretched day for the inauguration.

"Inauguration was a foul day, heavy snow to begin with, later the sun coming out just enough to turn it into loathsome slush. Mr. Taft had to make his inaugural address in the Senate. Father did not drive back to the White House with him. He thought it a perfectly absurd custom, and went directly to the station, where he saw a number of friends who had gathered into the presidential waiting room to say goodby to him.

"I did not go to the Capitol. Mother came over to my house until it was time to join father. Mrs. Richard Townsend, who knew father's fondness for terrapin, had sent him a jarful for his lunch on the train. Her little old footman brought it to the drawing room. I seem only to remember the little old footman John and a couple of Ethel's admirers standing on the platform with bouquets in their hands to present to her. And so I saw the family off.

"I went to the inaugural ball, where I was gulped over by people from the White House * * * by friends of father and by some who I think merely enjoyed gulping for its own sake."

Apropos of Washington authors, a hearty welcome will be given here to "Spoken in Tibet," by Henrietta Sands Merrick, author of "In the World's Attic," just off the presses of G. P. Putnam's Sons, New York.

Mrs. Merrick, who is a daughter of Rear Admiral Sands, is well known in the Capital and her travel books are vivid creations of the scenes and peoples of whom she writes so attractively.

Her journey across Himalaya, with its enduring memories of other adventurers who have accomplished this difficult feat, is charmingly told in her new book. Flying from England to Delhi, in India, a week's journey, Mrs. Merrick went first to Darjeeling, thence through the jungle and on up to the high snows. There were fatiguing marches from dawn to dark, day after day, across vast tablelands above 15,000 feet until she reached Gyantse, within four marches of Lassa.

What a journey that must have been among the clouds, in deep forests and across wind-swept plains. Her descriptions make us live it with her, the beauty, the magic and the mystery of such a little or, rather, great journey into regions where American women have seldom, if ever, been seen.

Her book, by the way, is dedicated to Frank J. Hogan, who in his hours of leisure from the exactions of legal leadership, is a scholar of parts.

Friends tried to persuade Mrs. Merrick not to undertake such a hazardous expedition. But she only grew all the more determined, and writes of these well-meaning efforts thus: "The urge to travel in that mysterious country was not checked; yet stop signals seemed to be set on every side. The doors to a wider life seemed to be closing against me, and

"I want to live, live out, not wobble through My life somehow and then into the dark."

She went and was amply repaid for all the hardships, for, as she has written: "In a long lifetime I could not forget the thrill of climbing to the heights of the Jelep-La, then actually 'descending' into the highest land in the world."

Minute Reviews.

Collectors of Lincolnia, and they are legion, will rejoice in "Abraham Lincoln, President and Man," by William E. Barton (Bobbs-Merrill Co., Indianapolis), crowning the work of Dr. Barton, in what has been literally a lifetime of research into the days and years of the Great Emancipator. Fortunately, Dr. Barton has picked up the work of Senator Beveridge when death came and stopped his pen. The last years in the White House are pictured in a master hand.

Katherine Anthony has made a rich contribution to the story of "Marie Antoinette," queen of tragedy, in her book brought forth from the presses of Alfred A. Knopf, as one of the truly outstanding books of the new season.

The interest in Marie Antoinette, her untimely end and the stirring times in which she lived never fails. There is an undying fascination in her very name, even as there is in that of Mary Queen of Scots, who also found the way of royalty but a path to an early grave, as men count time.

As some one has said, they had everything and they lost everything, which is, after all, about the most pitiful thing than can happen to a human being.

Miss Anthony has done her task in a sympathetic manner, yet with a strong adherence to the historic requirements of her theme.

EVENTS OF THE WEEK IN WASHINGTON PARENT-TEACHER ASSOCIATIONS

Due to the fact that next Wednesday is a holiday, all material for this column must be in the State office, room 501, 1201 Sixteenth street northwest, not later than the first mail on Tuesday.

At the meeting of the board of managers February 14 Mrs. Oliver Bowles was unanimously elected historian, filling the term of Mrs. Richard T. Wyche, who has moved to Oklahoma.

The regular monthly conference of the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers will be held Tuesday in the Wilson Teachers College, Eleventh and Harvard streets northwest, at 7:30 p. m. This is the meeting which was originally planned for the new Roosevelt High School. The program includes the following speakers: Miss May P. Bradshaw, assistant principal, Roosevelt, "What Courses High Schools Offer;" Dr. H. A. Smith, principal, Central, "Guidance (Electives);" Dr. Stephen E. Kramer, first assistant superintendent of schools, "Cadet Training;" J. P. Collins, assistant principal, Eastern, "Assemblies (Type and Purpose);" Miss Alice Wood, Western, "Real Work of the High School Teacher, In and Out of Class;" W. C. STUDENT AID.

The State Student Aid chairman invites all local chairmen wishing to become more acquainted with the work to visit the rooms located at 1464 Columbia road northwest Wednesday of any week, where she will be glad to instruct and answer questions concerning student aid. She may be reached by phoning North 6046.

Donations of shoes and clothing are needed to continue the work of keeping the needy children in school.

Due to the fact that next Wednesday is a holiday, the rooms will be closed, but will be open for volunteers to help with the sewing on Thursday, instead.

The emergency committee for the supplementary feeding of children met in the State office Thursday morning to formulate plans, and announces that it is ready to receive donations to assist in carrying on this work. Mrs. Joseph Sanders and Mr. Stephen E. Kramer head this committee. Other members are Mrs. J. J. Boyl, Mrs. H. S. Parsons, Mrs. E. R. Seal, Mrs. L. B. Castell, Mrs. J. N. Saunders, Miss Adelaide Davis and Mrs. Flora Hendley.

The card party and dance to be given in the Hall of Nations of the Washington Hotel on Friday evening is the only big activity of the organization of the year and support of the local associations is urged. Music will be furnished by Marceron for the dancing, which is to last from 10 p. m. to 1 a. m. Cards begin at 8:30. Table and door prizes will be given. Tickets may be obtained from Mrs. L. B. Castell, 1833 Gallatin street northwest, Georgia 7348, or at the door.

WOODRIDGE.

Mrs. J. N. Saunders, State president, was guest speaker at the Founders' Day exercises at the February meeting of the Woodridge Association on February 9, and a birthday cake, decorated in blue and gold, with 36 candles was cut by her. A pageant was presented by a group of children, directed by Miss M. Fisher.

The health chairman, Mrs. A. B. Genung, reported that 376 children had been weighed and measured at the beginning of the term, 193 of whom received gold stars, 154 blue, 19 red, and 10 green, including 6 children who were formerly in the red star class, but now eligible for advancement to other star classes.

By unanimous vote, the following donations were made: Founders' Day gift, annual contribution to the budget of the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers, and a contribution to the Central Milk Fund.

MacFARLAND JUNIOR HIGH.

There will be a meeting of the association tomorrow evening at 8 p. m. in the auditorium of the school. Miss Alida Bowler, of the Children's Bureau, will speak on Washington's obligation to school children in 1933. There will be a vocal solo by Miss Inez Crater, and Mr. William H. Gaumnitz, of the Federal Bureau of Education, will speak on "The Effects of the Depression on the Schools of America. Miss Doris Hohberger will give a reading—"Seventeen." At the conclusion of the program, refreshments will be served by members of the hospitality committee, Mrs. James Bligh, chairman.

GORDON JUNIOR HIGH.

The monthly meeting of the Gordon Junior High Association was held as a Founders' Day program on Wednesday evening, February 8, in the school auditorium, with Mrs. E. R. Altman presiding. Following a short business meeting a French play was given by pupils of the French class. A tableau, depicting some of the charter members of the Parent-Teacher organization, was presented. Several selections were sung by the Boys' Glee Club of Gordon. Mrs. Saunders, State president, was guest speaker. Refreshments were served in the cafeteria at the conclusion of the meeting.

WHITTIER.

Founders' Day was celebrated at Whittier School Monday at 3 p. m. Mrs. J. N. Saunders, State president, gave a talk telling of the founding of the Parent-Teacher movement in 1897, and the progress made in teaching in the schools, also of the closer contact between the school and home that has been established.

A motion was made and carried that the milk be reduced to 20 cents per week until the surplus in the milk fund is depleted.

Miss Green, principal, explained the new school organization. Children are placed in groups best suited to their individual needs and classes are arranged so each teacher will have an equal teaching load.

Mrs. Hansen requested that discarded, clean clothing be sent to school during the week of February 13 to 17. These clothes will be sent to 1464 Columbia road, where they will be mended and distributed to needy school children.

Miss Pass' room won the attendance prize given to the class having the most parents present at a meeting.

A program was arranged in commemoration of Joseph Haydn, musician. A short biography was given by Janet Gardner; a poem, dedicated to Haydn, was recited by Eleanor Davis, and one of his compositions was played on the piano by Shirley Stickney.

SHEPHERD.

The membership committee had charge of the Founders' Day celebration at the last meeting, acting as hostess and serving ice cream and birthday cake. Mrs. R. J. Hinton read an interesting account of the history of Founders' Day, and Maj. F. A. Frost gave a history of the local association. As all of the rooms have attained a 100 per cent membership, each teacher was presented with $5 for her room.

Dr. Loren B. T. Johnson was guest speaker and Miss Jeannette Bittner guest soloist.

The date for the card party previously planned was set for February 27.

BRADLEY-FAIRBROTHER.

Chorus songs, accompanied by Miss D. F. McClure, opened the meeting of the association on Thursday. Mrs. Saunders, State president, gave a talk on "Cooperation," stressing child welfare, and Miss A. F. Kimball sang two vocal selections.

In commemoration of Founders' Day, a pageant was given by Mrs. Hiatt's class. At the close of this feature the president, Mrs. Guyer, lighted the candles on a large birthday cake.

Reports were made by Mrs. Guyer, Mrs. Riggle, Mrs. Fraser and Miss Carraher, and routine business transacted.

Donations for milk lunch and physical culture were made.

Officer Strobel and the Boy Patrol expressed gratitude for the luncheon and entertainment given for them lately in the association.

The attendance banner and prize were won by Mrs. Hiatt's fifth grade. Refreshments were served during the social period following the meeting.

LENOX.

The regular monthly meeting of the Lenox Association was held in the school on February 9, at 8 p. m. A patriotic program, in honor of the birth month of Washington and Lincoln, was presented in connection with the annual commemoration of Founders' Day.

The guest speaker, Mrs. W. C. Jones, sixth vice president of the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers, gave a talk on "Some of the Important Functions of Parent-Teacher Work."

In the classrooms, students' work will be exhibited and projects will be carried on in the laboratories, shops, domestic science rooms and gymnasiums. The teachers will be in the classrooms for conferences.

A most interesting innovation is being introduced at this meeting. The cafeteria will be open at 6:30 and a turkey dinner will be served at a moderate price, giving the parents an opportunity to taste the wholesome food and enjoy the pleasant surroundings which the children enjoy at lunch time.

LANGDON.

Founders' Day was celebrated on Thursday, at 2 p. m., with Mrs. Emil Smith presiding. After singing one verse of the "Star-Spangled Banner" and repeating the Lord's Prayer, Miss Ingrick's first grade class appeared in a little operetta called "Going Shopping." Mrs. Luyster accompanied the children.

The second part of the program was an Indian unit from Mrs. Kerwin's room, second grade. The children had made the costumes with very little help. Songs, selections from "Hiawatha," exercises and dances comprised this project.

"Ancient Peoples" was written and acted out by the sixth grade pupils. The history and dress of each race was explained as one by one the actors were interviewed by a Roman king and his court. Egyptian, Persian, Assyrian, Greek, Hebrew, Roman and early western European appeared in clothing each had made.

When the minutes of the last meeting were dispensed with, Mrs. Webster reported an average of three children each day at the Juvenile Court the week of January 16. The milk report was read in the absence of the chairman and showed free milk distributed at the rate of 70 bottles a week. Mrs. Langdon, the new student aid chairman, announced the need for more clothing.

After the play given by the graduating class, expenses were deducted and a check for $10 was turned over to the Parent-Teacher Association.

Mrs. M. W. Buell, seventh vice president of the District of Columbia Congress of Parents and Teachers, was introduced. She spoke of clothes conservation and the milk fund, of which Mrs. Joseph Sanders is chairman, stressing that better-off schools must contribute to others. She also announced the study group from 9:30 to 11 every Thursday at the Franklin School.

NATIVITY SCHOOL.

At its last meeting the association voted its everlasting gratitude to the physicians and dentists who so generously conducted physical examinations of the children. The beneficial results of the survey are already becoming apparent in the enthusiasm of parents for permanent adoption of the idea and inspection twice during the school year.

The committee for the St. Patrick's Day card party—through which most of the Parent-Teacher activities are financed—report progress in their preparation of a program of entertainment other than usual bridge and 500. Merchants of the Brightwood neighborhood have contributed several prizes, including a door prize, advertising space and printing.

General committee chairman, Thomas F. Murphy, has arranged a series of neighborhood card parties for the benefit of the P.-T. A. Biweekly. Mr. Murphy moves his novel entertainment to a member's house on a different street. The ingenious plan for fund-raising, with a real entertainment value for those attending, is receiving much favorable comment. Those wishing to attend the next party should make reservations in advance by telephoning Mr. Murphy at GE. 9448.

Bridge Bids and Bumps

By FRANK B. LORD

I sometimes think that No One bids so bad
As stupid Partners I have often had;
For each and every Suit that they have named
Has caused my Rivals to go doubling Mad.
—Rubaiyat of Bridge.

BRIDGE being a game which it is conceded requires more or less intelligence and is not successfully played by morons, one would naturally assume that those who play it would be comparatively free from superstitions. Strangely, however, such is not the case with a large number of players, for the great joss of the supernatural exercises a peculiar influence over them in some of the minor formalities of the game. There are players who insist to the point of absurdity in dealing with the deck with which they cut, professing to believe that good luck lies in such selection. Others prefer a blue deck to red one and vice versa for the same reason, or perhaps the lack of reason. In the choice of seats they are most exacting because "the cards are running" in this or that direction. All of this the rules permit, to the players cutting the high cards, merely to enable decision to be made without controversy.

Ely Culbertson, international authority and lecturer on bridge, states that the question most persistently asked of him relates to the selection of "the best seats" at the bridge table. This is an evidence of superstition unworthy of persons possessing the required brain power to play bridge, yet unquestionably it prevails, for superstition is a human frailty born of ignorance, and the race has not yet become sufficiently civilised to eradicate it.

Most players who yield to bridge superstitions are likely to make an initial selection of north and south seats when they have the right of choice, but for that reason it would be difficult for them to explain. It may be because instructors in their illustrated plays show far more game winning hands held by north and south players than by those sitting east and west. Usually they give the privilege of making the original bid, which is an advantage, to the player sitting in the south position. This, however, is largely a matter of custom and for the sake of uniformly and convenience. There is no motive of luck in it. Also, in duplicate play the alert captain places those regarded as the best players in north and south position. This is done only in a commendable effort to balance and equalize the players as to their ability and to have those with the superior skill matched in the series of plays against their kind at the other tables, since each, at one time or another, must hold the same hands. Thus the less skillful players, for a like reason, contest against those who are nearly their equals. The "arrow" which guides the course of the play always points to the north, simply because it must point in some direction, and to avoid confusion the rules so provide. There is no superstition involved.

Other players perfer east and west seats, assigning such reasons, if any, as that the earth revolves upon its axis from west to east and that in consequence "the sun do move" from east to west, and that trade and commerce and migration follow lines of latitude to a greater extent than lines of longitude, so that good cards should run in the same directions. They are quick to desire a change, however, if their superstition fails. In the long run the superstitious player will be the losing player, for to the degree that he follows superstition and hunches to that degree he will abandon sense and reasoning.

A prominent physician on the staff of St. Elisabeths Hospital, and who is also an excellent bridge player, tells of a patient in that institution who, despite his mental sickness, has a profound knowledge of bridge. He is, however, a firm believer in what he calls polarization; it is his great obsession. He thinks himself polarized and will only play when the table is set at such an angle that two of its diagonal corners are on the axis of the polar star. Whenever he attempts a finesse and it fails, he declares that the failure was caused by the fact that the table was not properly polarized, in that the corner which should have pointed unerringly toward the star was a fraction of an inch off direction. Otherwise, he plays better than an average game of bridge and is often uncanny in his deductions and in his reading of the position of cards held by his adversaries. His hallucination in this respect is on a par with the superstitions of some players whose mental condition has never been subjected to psychoanalysis.

"LUCKY BOY" John D. Mothershed set a success mark one night last week at the National Press Club, that is rarely attained and which is likely to stand as a record for a long time. In two successive rubbers he scored two small slams and two grand slams, both of the latter being bid and made when he was vulnerable, and in consequence, each meant 2,250 points to his side. The second grand slam, however, was not made until John, in his exuberance over his previous successes in slam bidding had been set for 1,700 points.

Both skill and daring were necessary and the "lucky boy" has these qualities in abundance. The opening bid by the adversary on his right was a diamond. Mothershed held seven spades, five clubs, each with top honors, and a small heart. In the bidding his partner had made an overcall in diamonds, showing either the ace of that suit or none at all and ability to trump its first lead. With this assurance he took a chance on his lone heart as that suit had not been mentioned, and bid seven spades, trusting that adversary on his left would lead a diamond in response to his partner's original diamond bid. As he had expected a diamond was led and dummy showed the singleton ace of diamonds upon which Mothershed discarded his losing heart. The rest was easy. Had a heart been led instead of a diamond, the contract must have been set one trick, but by luck and daring it was fulfilled. The resulting 2,250 points for grand slam vulnerable wiped out the previous sets and left a comfortable margin.

The irony of the play was, however, that on the previous hand Mothershed was set for a meager 250 when his adversaries, had they taken the bid themselves, could have made game and rubber and thereby saved themselves in the neighborhood of 2,000 points. This play well illustrates the error of doubling to set an adversary one or two tricks only, when the game and especially rubber may be made by the doubling pair. In the third rubber the Mothershed pair bid and made another small slam, thus running up two grand slams vulnerable and three small slams in three successive rubbers for a total slam score of 6,500. And no one wonders why they call him "Lucky Boy John."

A group of Washington players motored to Harrisburg, Pa., last week and participated in the Central Pennsylvania Championship conducted by Richard E. Needham, who was the manager of The Washington Post tournament. Among the Washington players were Roy Thurtell, A. P. Stockvis, "Dick" Wood, Van E. Clark, Mrs. Clark and Mrs. H. L. Shepard. Two events were scheduled, one for teams and the other for pairs. The Washington contingent took part only in the pairs match, which was won by Mr. Thurtell and Mrs. Clark in a large field of players. Stockvis and Clark were second. Besides Harrisburg and Washington, Reading, Williamsport, Carlisle, York, Greensburg and several other Pennsylvania cities were represented in the tournament.

In the February duplicate of the Washington Bridge League, a one-night event under the Mitchel movement, top score was won by Mrs. "Peach" Clark and Mrs. John I. Power occupying north and south positions, and James Lemon and H. L. Shepard sitting east and west.

Another duplicate novice scored a triumph in last Monday night's game at 1641 R street, conducted by Mrs. Alma Byrne. Against a field of old-time players, Adrian Smoot, of Tilden Gardens, won top score in the first duplicate match in which he had ever participated, showing that a good rubber bridge player need have no fear of placing his skill to test in a duplicate match. Mrs. Helen Riordan was his partner.

In the semimonthly mixed duplicate at the Washington Country Club, top score north and south was made by Milton Westcott, of East Falls Church, and Mrs. Mildred Sellinger. East and west winners were Dr. and Mrs. George Huffman.

"Two Diamonds" Tillie says she never tires of making the Goodyear bid because it saves the rubber.

SLAMS AT SUITS AND AT NOTRUMP.

ONCE a player has mastered the underlying principles of correct bidding and knows the mechanics of arriving at a makable Slam, the choice, whether suit or notrump, engages his attention.

A notrump Slam, like any other notrump bid, is built with two kinds of tricks—honors and establishable low cards in long suits. A trump Slam is built with four kinds of tricks—honors, trump-tricks in the long trump suit, ruffs in the Dummy and establishable low cards in other long suits.

It is obvious that a trump Slam bid is, as a rule, far more flexible, safer and richer in potential tricks than a notrump Slam bid. At a suit contract, extra tricks are available through ruffs in the Dummy; low cards in long suits can be mobilized in time and brought in as tricks under the protection of the trump suit in the combined hands. Even the enemy's established suit can be held up for several leads until reinforcements in side suits are mobilized; a long side suit can be established through ruffs in either hand without the necessity of losing a single trick to an opponent's stopper or stoppers in that suit; opportunities for squeezes and end-plays are also much greater; finally, the entire hand does not hang upon a finesse which, if unsuccessful, offers a reentry and precipitates a catastrophic avalanche from the opponents' established suit.

Theory and experience agree that a notrump mania in Slam bids is as deadly as with Opening bids and responses. Hence the following principle should be strictly observed:

With few exceptions, all Small and Grand Slam bids should be made at the best suit bid, be it even a minor, rather than at notrump.

Exceptions occur as follows:

(a) When the hands contain the necessary values, but lack an adequate trump suit. With adequate trump support, a four-card suit Slam bid should almost always be preferred to notrump.

(b) When the selected trump suit may lose 2 tricks, and it is clear from the bidding that 12 tricks are available at notrump. This may happen when the Dummy holds four small trumps of partner's second bid suit (major), but the bidding clearly indicates tops in other suits amounting to a strong probability of 12 tricks at notrump.

(c) When (usually in Grand Slam bids) the bidding unmistakably indicates not only four Aces, but one solid five-card and one solid six-card suit. This is in order to obviate, with extreme freaks, the danger of losing the first trick through a ruff by an opponent. It goes without saying that such a freak is extraordinarily rare unless Goulashes are played, and the certainty that two suits are solid is even rarer.

All in all, occasions when six or seven notrump should be preferred to a trump Slam are extremely rare. The most scientific approach to a Slam is the discovery of the best trump bid.

Instances in which a player receives equal support for his four-card and five-card bid suits are far from common. In all such instances, the four-card suit should be preferred, leaving the longer suit as a side suit.

The selection of an adequate trump suit for the combined hands is of even greater importance in approaching a Slam than with game bids. Many Slams, bristling with top cards, are poisoned with a miserable appendix in an opponent's hand, as J 10 8 7 2 of trumps or, more ignominious still, 10 9 4 3 2 of trumps. In order to avoid these deadly rocks of distribution, the utmost caution should be used in building up the trump inferences. A combination like trump 9 7 6 2 or J 10 2, or even Q 3 2 in the Dummy, though technically "adequate" trump support, should be viewed, if not with alarm, at least with suspicion. Here, again, it does not follow that a Slam should not be contracted for with a four-card suit. Not to bid a four-card suit at all for fear of possible unfavorable distribution should be like jumping into the river to avoid the rain. It simply means that the most solicitous attention should be given to the careful construction of inferences that determine the trump suit.

In the Culbertson System of 1933 numerous safety devices are automatically available for the proper discovery of the best trump bid, but, in view of the vital importance of Grand Slam bids, the following new convention was developed by the author to strengthen trump inferences.

A great number of makable Small Slams are lost simply because the partner holds but three small or even two small supporting trumps, while his own suit has been denied by partner. He fears to contract for Slam, not being certain that the trump suit contains no more than one loser. Even a greater number of makable Grand Slam bids will be reached if partner can get the count of his partner's trump suit.

A Jump Rebid in the same suit shows a six-card or longer suit, containing not more than one loser, assuming unfavorable but not extremely freakish distribution. The word "Rebid" implies, of course, that the suit has previously been bid by the player. For instance:

South	North

South's Jump Rebid does not necessarily indicate any additional honor values, but it does indicate a nearly solid trump suit. If South bids only three hearts over North's two spades, it is also a Rebid, but merely shows a fair six-card suit or even a strong five-card suit. The Jump Rebids are reserved only for six-card or longer suits containing not more than one loser such as K Q J 10 8 4 or A Q J 10 8 6 3. The fact that in the foregoing example South, after North's Forcing Takeout, rebids directly to game, far from closing the bidding, constitutes almost an inferential Force. It is obvious that after North makes a Forcing Takeout (which shows at least 3½ honor-tricks), he will be much more encouraged to approach a Slam if he knows that South has a long and powerful trump suit.

Again, in the same example, if South responds with two notrumps to North's two spades, and North now bids four spades (thus shutting out the range of three spades or three notrump) his Jump response, in turn, indicates a near-solid spade suit. This convention is generally used after Opening bids of one and after strength is shown by the Responding Hand. After Opening two-bids, it can be used only occasionally, for situations will frequently arise when a Jump Rebid, even to show a near-solid trump suit, will shut out other and more valuable information. It follows that failure to make a Jump Rebid after Opening bids of one carries with it a negative inference that partner's suit many contain more than one loser, but not necessarily so after a Forcing two-bid. This Jump Rebid convention is invaluable in approaching Small and Grand Slam bids.

The following hand is an example:

South—Dealer.

Neither side vulnerable.

♠ Q
◇ A K Q 5 4

♠ A K J 10 9 8
♡ A 8 5

The bidding. (Figures after bids in table refer to numbered explanatory paragraphs.)

South	West	North	East
1♠	Pass	3◇	Pass
4♠(1)	Pass	4NT(2)	Pass
5NT(3)	Pass	7♠(4)	Pass
Pass	Pass

1—This bid shows an almost solid spade suit with one loser at the most. North holds the spade Queen, the only possible loser.

2—North's picture of the hand is complete. A Small Slam is a practical certainty and a Grand Slam also a certainty, provided South holds the heart Ace, and not the King-Queen. The only missing card is the heart Ace. He therefore bids four no-trumps.

3—Showing two Aces.

4—A Grand Slam is a certainty. There can be no losers in spades, and the diamond and club suits are certainly strong enough to allow for South's losers.

The key bid in this hand was the four spade bid by South. Many Grand Slams are missed because partner holds the missing singleton honor and is never able to raise. The Jump Rebid is the only natural and logical way in which two partners can definitely determine that a suit is completely solid.

Solution of Last Week's Problem.

Bid both hands. North, vulnerable, is Dealer.

♠ A K 5 4
♡ K 9 3
◇ Q 10 9 2

♠ J 10 2
♡ Q 10 2
◇ K 5 3
♣ K 9 3 2

Answer—The correct bidding:

North	South
1♠	1NT
2NT	3NT
Pass

Obviously, the biddable suit should be preferred as an Opening bid by North. South's notrump response is obvious, and North should now only bid two notrump. His partner's response might conceivably be shaded and made on less than 1½ honor-tricks, and, in addition, the North hand offers very little possibility of long-suit tricks being set up. South should now bid three notrump, as he has several plus values in his hand, in addition to a full 1½ honor-tricks.

This Week's Problem.

Each Sunday I am giving a problem in bidding. This is No. 7 of the series. The answer to today's problem will be given next Sunday.

You hold:

Spades	K J 10 9
Hearts	A 5
Diamonds	A K 5 8
Clubs	K Q 2

East and West are vulnerable. You, South, are not. East deals and bids one spade. What do you bid?

McGoofey's First Reader

By H. I. PHILLIPS

OUR subject today is the American winter resort.

A winter resort is a community located at least $500 from your home town, as the bull flies.

It is a city or town entirely surrounded by cars with strange license plates and by tourists with strange appetites.

It is a place to which people go who still have so much money that the coal problem is optional.

The chief requirements of a successful winter resort are:

(a) A good press agent.

(b) A good average for nice weather.

(c) A liberal advertising appropriation.

(d) Some tropical foliage.

(e) A swell beach, a fine golf course, or both.

Of these the press agent is the most important.

If a mechanical rabbit, some greyhounds and a few bathing beauties are tossed in, so much the better.

The duties of a winter resort press agent are many, but first and foremost is the responbility of seeing that no mention of a temperature below 60 ever gets into a newspaper and that no photograph showing any visitor in an overcoat ever gets through the postoffice.

You can tell when you are in an expensive winter resort by going to any hotel employe during an all-day rainstorm and asking, "Do you think we are going to have rain?"

If he answers, "No, sir;" you will know that you are in a Grade A resort, excellently managed.

All hotel employes in a fashionable winter resort are schooled against ever admitting that the weather is or could be inclement. Even during a flood the doorman will say, "This is just a shower. It will be all clear in an hour."

This is great psychology. After a time the guests get so sold on the idea that they can't recognize bad weather when they see it themselves, particularly if they're paying $35 a day to stay in it.

But people returning from a winter resort never admit the weather was bad anyhow.

They don't want their friends to think they spent all that money to stay indoors and be constantly taken for a good fourth at bridge.

WHO is this?

This is Gedney.

Gedney looks very sad.

Yes, Gedney certainly does look very sad. In fact, he is as sad as he looks.

Is Gedney weeping?

No, but he may burst into tears any minute.

What is the matter with Gedney?

He has had a great disappointment.

Love?

No.

Business?

Not exactly.

In what, then?

In politics.

What about politics?

Gedney thought that if he went to the polls with millions of other voters and registered his disapproval of things, it would make quite a difference at once. He thought that when the people expressed themselves as dramatically as they did in November, Congress would heed the warning. He has found that it hasn't made any difference to speak of.

Will it make any difference in the future?

It is very doubtful.

Why did Gedney think that a change in parties would result in improvements?

He was always very childish.

OUR FEATHERED FRIENDS.

(The Parrot.)

A parrot is a sort of owl with loud-speaker attachment.

It is an oversized pigeon so camouflaged that it could hide all its life on a pool table and never be discovered.

A parrot is to the bird world what a Congressman is to the world of human beings. Only it doesn't pretend that it knows what it is talking about.

Parrots come from tropical countries and always regret that they did not stay there.

In their native state they flit from tree to tree and are never bothered by old maids who want to interview them on the matter of soda crackers.

In its wild state a parrot never hears bakery products mentioned.

But it is caught at an early age and shipped to America to be imprisoned for life and taught to be a broadcaster.

Parrots are really, when domesticated, radio station announcers without the egoism and the desire to win a dictation award.

They are fed seeds, vest buttons, &c., kept in cages in hall rooms and taught to use profanity and repeat uninteresting observations.

When parrots die they go to a parrot heaven where crackers are never referred to and where no woman ever fusses around them chirping "Pretty Polly" and tweaking their beaks.

GRANDFATHER'S CLOCK.

(Revised version.)

It stands in the corner of grandmother's room;
It reaches from ceiling to floor.
"Tick-tock" it keeps saying the whole day long—
"Tick-tock" and nothing more.

Backward and forward, this way and that,
Its pendulum swings night and day;
Tick-tock" it keeps saying, just simply "tick-tock"—
What more do you want it to say?

Radio Dial Flashes

By ROBERT D. HEINL

SENATOR BENNETT C. CLARK, of Missouri, who was a colonel in the World War, must marvel at the changes which have been brought about by radio and sound amplification when he reads his father's description of a Civil War battle. We ran across this rereading "My Quarter Century of American Politics" by the late Champ Clark.

"An amazing thing about the Battle of Perryville," Speaker Clark wrote, "was that while at a distance of 6 or 7 miles, I could hear it from beginning to end. Gen. Buell and his staff who were not half that far away, did not hear it until it had been raging five or six hours.

"Perhaps the topography and the direction of the wind were the reasons. Buell's failure to hear this battle was one of the facts which caused him to be relieved of his command."

The Rev. Bernard C. Clausen, pastor of the First Baptist Church of Syracuse, N. Y., will take for his text "The Doomed Battalion" during the Baptist service, which will occupy the morning period of the Church of the Air today (WJSV, 10 a. m.).

The Most Rev. John A. Floersh, Bishop of the Roman Catholic Diocese of Louisville, Ky., will deliver an episcopal message during the Church of the Air period this afternoon (WABC network, but probably not WJSV, 1:30 p. m.).

Music will be supplied by a male choir of 60 voices composed of seminarians from the Benedictine Abbey at St. Meinard, Ind., under the direction of the Rev. Thomas Schaefers. The choir will open the period with "Veni, Veni, Sancte Spiritus," by the Rev. Vincent Wagner of the abbey. It will be sung from the only manuscript in existence.

REMARKING that he believed listeners in the short-wave field were ahead of us abroad, Edgar Priest, organist and choirmaster at the Washington Cathedral, said that as long as four years ago the cathedral services in Washington had been picked up direct at his old home in Yorkshire, England, about 50 miles from Liverpool.

"I was surprised when a man there told me he had heard the Washington Cathedral services," Mr. Priest said. "Thinking he might have it confused with some other broadcast, I questioned him closely. 'I heard it, all right,' he insisted.

"Allowing for the distance in time between here and there, the hour the Yorkshireman gave checked identically with the time of our Sunday outdoor service at the Peace Cross in the Cathedral Close.

"It was the next remark he made, however, that convinced me that he really had heard us. 'You had a band playing with the choir and'—here he hesitated as if he feared he might offend me—'it sounded a bit thin.'

"I knew exactly what he referred to—not a band, but in those days we had assisting us a brass quartet. Naturally, to one accustomed to a full brass band and, because of the mechanical imperfections of broadcasting as long ago as that, it probably did sound 'a bit thin.'

"A surprising thing about it, to me, at least, was that this man, who was a factory hand, a weaver, had himself built the set with which he was able to pick up the Capital of the United States, so far away.

"The factory man, with his little home-made set, which would have cost him hardly anything to build, not only heard America, but listened to stations all over Europe as well."

EFREM ZIMBALIST, violinist, will play the concerto in D major by Johannes Brahms when he appears as soloist with Bruno Walter and the New York Philharmonic-Symphony Orchestra in the special Brahams centenary program this afternoon (WJSV 3 o'clock). Selections chosen by Walter for the orchestra will include the Tragic Overture and the Symphony No. 4 in E minor.

The premiere of "Lament for the Living" a suite for lyric miniatures for modern orchestra by Charles Harold, American composer-arranger, will be presented by Andre Kostelanetz tonight (WJSV 8:15 o'clock). Harold himself will be at the piano.

The second of the series, "The Lawyer and the Public," will bring Roscoe Pound, dean of the law school of Harvard University, to the microphone this evening (WJSV, 6 o'clock).

Prof. Gerhard von Schulze Gaevernitz, of Freiburg University, will be the speaker during the International Radio Forum to be short-waved from Germany today (WEAF but not WRC 2:15 p. m.). The subject of the professor's talk will be "The Way Out."

"THE Man Who Was Double-Crossed," a story in which Warden Lewis E. Lawes will explain the new system of prison jurisdiction and the modern plan to restore a criminal to respectable citizenry, will be dramatized over WJZ tonight at 9 o'clock. Supporting Warden Lawes in the cast will be Joseph Bell in the role of Reporter Philip Stark.

William Faversham, English-born veteran of the American stage, will return to the cast of "Roses and Drums" in the role of Robert E. Lee today (WJSV, 5 p. m.).

The Rev. P. S. Ellis, of the First Baptist Church, Alexandria, will speak on the Virginia Chapel Hour (WJSV, 11 a. m.). The Rev. William Pierpont will be heard from the McKendree M. E. Church in Washington at the same hour (WMAL). The Petworth Baptist Church Choir will present a "Choral Hour" at 2:30 p. m. (WMAL).

EDDIE CANTOR is enthusiastic about Jimmy Wallington as his "straight man" in radio:

"My straight men on the stage, fortunately, were all a talented lot," Cantor said, "experienced troupers, fast thinkers, whose repartee and tempo blended perfectly into my style of work. Then came the time when I divorced myself from a stage partner and for many years, until August, 1931, to be exact, I was on my own in my appearances before audiences.

"So, when I began to make my first real contact with radio broadcasting at the studios and discovered that the fellow who was to feed me lines for my comedy was a total stranger to what in the theatrical profession is known as the 'theater technique' of straight men, I was a bit fearful in approaching my task.

"You see, the art of a straight man, or feeder, is little known except to those in the show business. To the uninitiated it looks simple enough to propound a question and then have the comic throw auditors into spasms of laughter. But take it on the word of Eddie Cantor, it is not as easy as all that. It is an art very much as being a comedian is an art.

"For one thing, a straight man must have as finely developed a sense of humor as the comedian he feeds his material to, or the comedy will suffer considerably and in some cases fall flat."

"The straight man must be an actor," Eddie Cantor continued, "but equally as essential is the question of timing and the tonal degree of voice in which the questions are asked. If the timing of the question is wrong or the voice volume not toned as accurately, the joke fails and the audience begins to regard the comedian as not at all funny, no matter how good the comedy may be.

"Now, then, to get back to what I started out to tell you. At my first rehearsal with Jimmy Wallington, my side-kick, on the Sunday night Chase & Sanborn hour, I had read but four lines of my script when my fear disappeared as quickly as does Rubinoff when I start picking on him Sunday nights at the studio.

"Jimminy, here was a guy who was fast on the trigger! Yes, it's about time I paid my respects to Jimmy Wallington and acknowledged my high regard for him, not only as a great announcer, as a great straight man but folks, I give you a real honest-to-goodness man—a real fellow, a lovable guy who radiates personality over the air waves—my friend, James Wallington, announcer to you, Jimmy to me."

How to Keep Well

By DR. W. A. EVANS

OTHER WINTER ITCHES.

ALTHOUGH one kind of itch arrogates to itself the name winter itch, most itches are worse in that season. Old people are prone to have itches which trouble worst in winter. One sign of advancing years is wrinkling of the skin. This results from a decrease in subcutaneous fat, a loss of elasticity and tone of the skin, and semiatrophy thereof. There is drying up of the sweat and grease glands along with the other changes in the skin and this contributes to the trouble. The skin is dry and lacking in grease and this increases the tendency toward itching. In wintertime old people who live in hot, dry air suffer most from senile itching. The disorder is quite troublesome at night after the bed has been well heated by the body.

The commonly used remedy for senile itching is to grease the skin with some regularity. A salve that contains some carbolic acid or phenol is rather better than one without these chemicals. Menthol and camphor salves are used by some people, and then there is our old friend, goose grease.

The people who are subject to bath itch have thin, delicate skins. Bathing in soap and warm water removes the protecting layers of grease, dirt, and epithelium and lets the air get closer to delicate nerve endings. When it does the nerves respond with a sensation of mixed pleasure and pain that we term itching. The sensation leads to scratching. We scratch because it gives us pleasure. Indulgence in the impulse is really the result of an urge to experience a glow of satisfaction and is to be classed as selfish. In the end the result of this indulgence, as is the case with most indulgences, is some kind of discomfort or disadvantage. It means increased desire to scratch and this causes eruptions and sometimes infections.

Bath itch can usually be avoided by using a superfatted soap, avoiding alkaline or cutting soaps. Some are all right so long as they stick to cold baths. Some must avoid all soaps, using bran water or borax water instead. The more effective the bath as a cleansing procedure the greater the liability to bath itch following its use. Some must use cold creams for cleansing the skin.

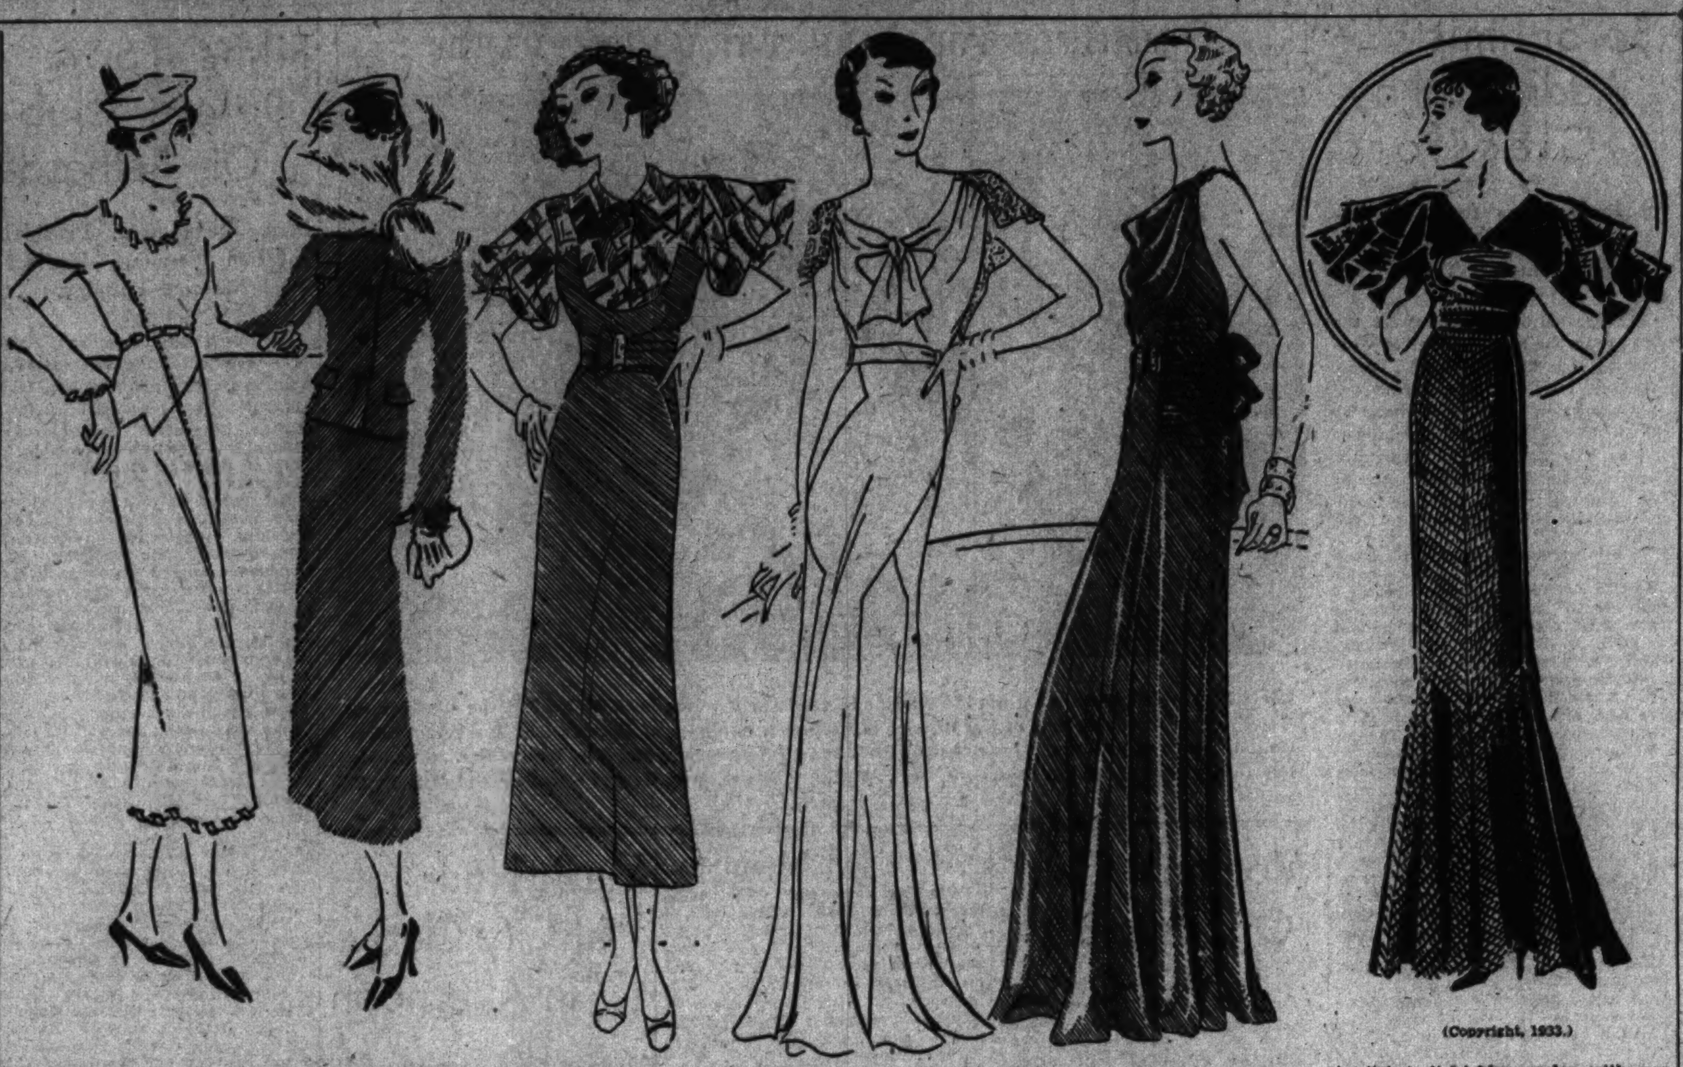
ENTRANCING GOWNS FOR INAUGURATION ARE DISPLAYED IN CAPITAL STORES



(Copyright, 1933.)

Demure and at the same time trim, an informal costume combines plaid organdie top in guimpe treatment with dress of maize linen. The multicolor plaid organdie reappears in shallow-crowned tilted brim hat.

Pervenche cire chiffon is adapted to formal styling favoring soft fulness in the shirred sides and draped neckline.

Buckles alternating rows of white and sapphire blue stones decorate tie belt and shoulders.

Rhinestone-studded slit back cape gives covered shoulders to a classic white rough crepe evening gown of slenderly molded silhouette.

The afternoon frock is of almond green rabbit hair woolen; the little suit is in light blue woolen, with gray fox; and the evening gown is entirely of sheer black velvet crinkled in shirred pattern.

Eleanor Blue New Color of White House

Shade Favored by Next First Lady; Mrs. Hoover Wears Blade Rough Crepe.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

GAILY and with a swaggering regard for the fashion mode of the moment Washington women of fashion have turned to the blues for their costumes since Mrs. Roosevelt has announced that the Inauguration Day costumes of herself and her daughter will be blue. Blue dresses and costumes of the soft grayish "Eleanor blue," named after the next First Lady, and the bright dark blue which Mrs. Curtis Dall affects have appeared in all our shop windows in the last week. The show shops are showing many blue footwear effects, since Mrs. Roosevelt has stated she is to wear blue shoes.

Every administration has seen the popularity of some favorite color named after the First Lady or the daughter of the White House. None have endured as have the now permanently established "Alice blue," the pretty shade of blue worn by Mrs. Nicholas Longworth when she was "Princess Alice" of the original Roosevelt administration. This is now a stock color in the factories and ataliers of the world.

When Helen Taft was a debutante "Helen pink" was the color of the season. Both Mrs. Taft and her daughter wore this color, Mrs. Taft's of a deeper tone than her daughter, when Miss Taft was presented to Washington society in the east room of the White House.

Three Wilson Colors.

The three daughters of President and Mrs. Wilson had colors named after them, the most popular being "Nell Rose," named after Miss Eleanor Wilson, now Mrs. William Gibbs McAdoo. "Jessica yellow" was named after Miss Jessie Wilson, the late Mrs. Frances Bowes Sayre, and "Margaret blue" was named after Miss Margaret Wilson. Nell rose was the color scheme of the Jessie Wilson bridesmaids' costumes, with Miss Eleanor Wilson and Miss Margaret Wilson, as maids of honor, wearing the deepest tones, and the costumes of the other bridesmaids shading down to the lightest petal tones of the rose.

Then there was "Harding blue," a bright brilliant shade of blue which every one wore a great deal for the first year or two of the Harding administration. Mrs. Coolidge showed a preference for a brilliant but beautiful shade of Pompeiian red which, while it was popular, was not universally worn because it was becoming only to certain types of women.

Mrs. Hoover is making her farewells at teas and luncheons in her honor in a smart spring costume of black rough crepe, with a well-fitted black coat with a cape collar of seal skin. With this she wears one of the new interwoven silk hats with a shallow crown and soft, narrow brim. There is a smart bow one side.

Many Local Engagements.

Washington took on its proper aspect of a gay winter Capital during the past week as the busy official and diplomatic women hurried about, some on foot and some in smart motors, through the snow to pay their calls or keep their luncheon and tea engagements. All fur coats seemed so glossy and modish-looking as the wearers came in from the snowstorm. At a Cabinet gathering Mrs. William N. Doak arrived rather late as she had walked several blocks. She looked pretty and youthful with her blonde hair blown by the wind and flecks of snow over her smooth broadtail coat with its collar fastened smartly about her throat. With this Mrs Doak wore one of the silk hats giving a promise of spring just around the corner even with the snow on the ground.

Mrs. Charles Francis Adams' figure looks at its best in her coat of broadtail, made on princess lines and cut rather shorter than many of the fur coats today. Underneath this coat Mrs. Adams is wearing one of the new gray spring dresses with gray shoes and a small black spring hat.

Just as smart as her fur-coated Cabinet sisters, Mrs. Walter R. Brown, wife of the Postmaster General, is wearing for wintry weather a coat of beige wool with huge sleeves of mink and a high mink collar. She wears this with a brown rough-crepe dress and brown felt hat.

In Galleries of Congress.

The galleries of the Senate and House are something of a fashion show these days since so many of those interested in the goings on at Congress stop in to listen between luncheons and teas. One afternoon recently Mrs. William D. Mitchell sat in the gallery with a party of friends looking unusually smart in an all-black ensemble with her favorite shade of blue scarf under the collar of her black fur coat. With this she wore a small black hat.

Mrs. Howard Tucker came in a brown sport ensemble with a beaver fur collar and one of the new mannish hats of brown felt. Of course, Mrs. James M. Thomson and Mrs. Bennett Champ Clark, sister and wife of the new Senator Bennett Champ Clark, were in the gallery this day as they are most days. Mrs. Thomson, who was on her way to a tea, wore a coat dress of hunters' green rough wool, trimmed with gray astrakhan, with a high rolled collar of the fur. With this she wore a small Russian-like hat with a band of astrakhan about it and a small, narrow brim something like that on a jockey's cap in front.

Word has come from Florida that Mrs. James Roosevelt, daughter-in-law of the President-elect and Mrs. Roosevelt, is sponsoring flowered effects in spring and summer costumes. Recently Mrs. Roosevelt wore at Palm Beach a knitted dress of blue and white flowered effect, made with a deep blue girdle about the natural waistline and with the bodice in Eton jacket effect. With this she wore a wide-brimmed, dark blue straw hat.

Milliners Stress Colored Trimming

Milliners are emphasizing multicolor ribbon trimmings, often in crude combination, such as yellow, vivid green and black, or else a combination like orange, green and navy.

Talbot combines pale gray with turquoise (both of which colors are high style favorites), using this combination for one of her high-crowned Directoire sailors.

Tiny crin horsehair veils and tortoise shell motifs are among the smart millinery trimmings.

Slit Skirts for Evening Wear Shown

Paris, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Long slit skirts for evening wear, slashed fifteen times to a depth of twelve inches, predicting a "show-your-ankle" mode for 1933 night-time styles, were displayed today as the season's fashion shows were drawing to a close.

A black crepe evening gown had an instep-length skirt deeply slashed fifteen times and innerlined with rose crepe, giving a petal effect at the hem.

Printed chiffon evening gowns were similarly designed and models of crepe often showed one ten-inch slash at the back or front.

The tendency to show ankles again at night was further indicated by frocks with skirts six inches from the floor in front and sweeping the floor at the sides and back.

The lowest decolletes as yet shown also attracted attention, there being gowns with backs entirely bare and others with higher backs but cut very low in the front.

Satin gowns in the new liqueur shades of chartreuse green and deep brandy beige were outstanding in the evening styles.

Formal afternoon fashions consisting of all-silk crepe ensembles or wool velvet coats combined with crepe frocks, also were prominent. A black and white printed crepe ensemble, designed with a three-quarter length coat, hemmed with gray fox, was worn with a very wide-brimmed black Milan hat. A rose red velvet coat was accompanied by a rosy beige crepe frock.

Lustrous Gloves Matching Gowns

New York, Feb. 18.—At the charity evening gala arranged by the Princess of Greece in the new Heim premises in Paris, Mme. Jacques Heim wore lustrous satin gloves matching a gown in a new strawberry pink tone.

The event was marked by a smart attendance, with quantities of shiny satin registering. Often a contrasting velvet bodice or trimming appeared on these gowns. Several tailored cloky gowns were observed, and a sprinkling of metal cloth jackets, and gowns with pailletted sections.

Spring Feminine Attire Masculine

A sudden impetus has been given to the masculine phase in feminine attire for spring. The fedora hats are an American fashion out of Paris. The suits being produced are shaped and cut to the London prototype.

Shirts, cleverly tailored, shirtwaist dresses with slim sports allure, waistcoats, mess jackets, pajamas and other beach clothes all appeal to a large and definite clientele.

Evening Gowns of Printed Chiffon

Chanel has a group of new evening gowns, all in printed chiffon.

Stylists note the amount of flowers used by many milliners. All natural types are approved, such as hyacinths, daisies and carnations. The couture are interested in flowers for evening decolletes.

Chic Blue Gown Has Feather Trim

Paris, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Feathers appear again in the mode. One of the smartest new evening gowns of dark blue silk jersey has a decolletage edged in white coque feathers.

The gown, which is designed along clinging lines, sweeps into a pointed train.

Cotton Collars Worn

A feature now is white cotton hand-knit collars that are detachable, and are like a narrow shoulder capelet; these appear on dark woolen suits, accompanied by fabric gloves with the same knitted cotton cuffs suggesting jacket cuffs.

Forgotten Woman Interesting From Fashion's Point of View

Man's Attire Is Unacceptable to Her and She Will Indulge in No Extremes; Daintiness, Such as Frills, Ruches and Flounces, Appeal to Her as Sartorial Coquetries.

New York, Feb. 18.—The "forgotten woman" is the subject of our fashion lesson for today—that is the nearly forgotten woman. She who refuses to accept man's attire. Her name is legion. It's amusing for her to wear a tailleur—with feminine accessories, tailored but still feminine, but she will have none of the extremes being practiced at the moment. She does not covet man's attire and has no intention of copying it.

There is and was and probably always will be the dainty woman who adores frills. She is agog over the prospect of wearing ruches and flounces and all the sartorial coquetries of her sex. She hails chiffons with delight, glad they are in fashion again, and she is thrilled with the possibilities of wearing a flower trimmed hat and a veil.

It's smart to be stylish, but it's a positive joy to be permitted to wear pretty things again, to be able to choose the becoming ones instead of those awfully smart things that usually are unflattering.

The short puffed sleeve is one of the girlish things slender women are glad to wear. Women who are not slender are grateful for the variety of sleeve styles not necessarily dependent on fullness.

Draperies are as different as the sheer materials in which they appear. They are not restricted to slender women, but may be handled according to the figure. It is particularly important to have a becoming neckline. If a draped one will accomplish the trick better than turned-over collars or other boyish things, then draped lines should be used.

The very popular, light above and dark below the waist type of dress appears in still another version—the sheer above type, often used in one light and dark color scheme.

The necessity for severely molded bodices is not urgent. One may wear rather blousy things if it seems best, although structural lines are more often accented. There is little change in waist lines.

Women's Suits Fancy Striped

Men's wear houses are surprised to see how many of their fancy striped men's suitings are ordered for women's suits. Hairline flannels and pinhead checks with plain companions are best-sellers for the tailored spring suit. In these, mannish oxfords and other grays are strong.

Worsted twill is another mannish woolen type that is being sponsored. Crisp, springy and ideal for tailoring, worsted twill reaches its heights in that old-fashioned tan tone most closely associated with twills of the past.

Lacquered Belt Accents Black

Paris, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Madeline Lambert, actress of the Comedie Francaise, is among smart continentals who choose black for evening wear.

She wears a gown of black georgette accented by a belt of black lacquered satin and touched with the same satin on the decolletage.

Mannish Pajamas Beach Favorite

Mannish pajamas have not given way as a beach and sun deck fashion. Their popularity in Hollywood for all-day wear may have an effect in certain less formal communities. Paul Poiret predicted some time ago that "Women would be wearing trousers in 1948."

Glen plaids provide the most exploited mannish inspiration in spring woolens.

Chamois Jackets Button to Chin

Paris, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Sleeveless chamois jackets are a new sports accessory. They are made in the natural chamois color and designed to button up to the chin.

Active sports women wear them with a sleeved jersey for added warmth.

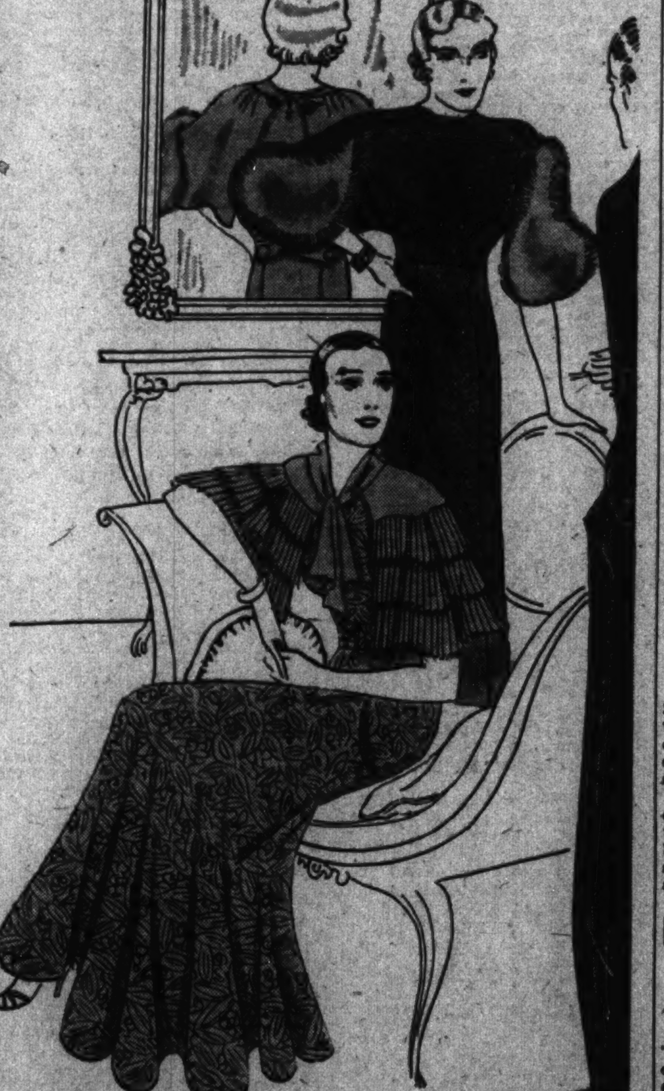
Park View Club

The February meeting of the Park View Woman's Club was held Tuesday evening at the home of Mrs. Thomas Griffith, 446 Newton place northwest, with Mrs. Morgan, Mrs. Jonscher, Mrs. Jones and Mrs. Standish the assisting hostesses.

At the conclusion of the business meeting the program chairman, Mrs. Edward Stitt, took charge and presented Miss Margaret Fraser, chairman, division of homemaking, District Federation of Women's Clubs. Miss Helen Colhoun gave two groups of readings and Mrs. Alice Marlowe presented several piano selections.

The bridge chairman announced that the February meeting of the bridge section would be held on Tuesday at 1 o'clock, at the home of Mrs. Jonscher, 427 Manor place, with Mrs. Morgan assisting.

Spring Costumes Will Serve Well on Inaugural Schedule



Two fresh, new spring costumes that should serve every need for the coming inaugural schedule are sketched for the Meanderer by a fashion artist of one of Washington's leading department stores.

The evening gown is of the new yellow shade known as citron; its material is starched lace, so prevalent in spring fashion. The becoming little shoulder cape is edged with pleated ruffles of matching material.

The dinner or afternoon dress shown is of gray sheer crepe. With the gray fox-trimmed, bib-like semicape removed, the gown is a severely simple sleeveless dinner dress. The sleeveline simulated by the gray fur is particularly becoming. The back closing of the semicape is interesting and unusual. The Meanderer will tell you where these gowns are to be found, and how much they cost, if you will call The Washington Post, National 4205, Extension 19, or address the Meanderer, The Washington Post, inclosing self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

Flowered Organdie Has Flowing Skirt

Paris, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Mrs. Irving Netcher, the former Rosy Dolly, wears an evening frock of flowered organdie this season.

The frock, which is printed in a flowered pattern of pink, gray and lavender, is designed with a simple bodice, semifitted hipline and a flowing skirt. Two big pale pink roses are thrust into the decolletage.

Gray Spring Is Forecast in Chicago

Chicago, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—It is going to be a gray spring in the Windy City if the displays in shop windows mean anything—and they generally do—as can be seen already by the pre-Easter bonnets that are appearing on Michigan boulevard.

Gray is staging a strong come-back.

Several leading specialty shops on the avenue today had displays of new spring suits in gray. They ranged from dressy, fur-trimmed models to sport and street suits of tweeds and woolen mixtures of predominantly gray tones.

Gray and brown not long ago were considered an outlandish color combination. Now they are accepted company.

A State street department store is featuring a gray rough woolen dress with a big modernistic design in brown. In the same store in the dry goods section, prominently displayed, is a print with a brown figure on a gray background.

A well-groomed woman, wearing a dull gray crepe frock and brown hat, was observed lunching at a smart restaurant. Her fur coat was brown, as were her bag and gloves. She wore amber beads.

Gray has invaded evening fashions, too.

One smart shop on upper Michigan avenue is displaying two embroidered organdie frocks. One has a black velvet jacket. The other bright red ribbon girdle.

Gray millinery is here.

Lacework Favored for Evening Hats

Vienna, Feb. 18.—There is a highly developed lace-making industry in Vienna whose leaders constantly try to find additional fields where lacework may be employed. In cooperation with the Vienna School for Applied Arts it was suggested to use lacework for millinery purposes.

At present Viennese hatmakers are concentrating on evening hats and the use of lacework is favored for this because gold and silver laces are most suitable for evening models. Silk and lace cords of more quiet shades are employed for daytime styles.

A variation is that of necklaces, chokers and bracelets, which exactly match the material and colors used on the hats. Handbags of the same kind of lacework are also stressed.

Suits Developed in Plain Colors

The usual rumors before the openings are circulating, and this season they are chiefly concerned with colors. Daffodil green, yellow and a deep ice cream pink are among the shades that are mentioned.

Many suits are developed in plain colors, in close stitches suggesting tapestry and accompanied by cotton blouses; sometimes the blouses are solidly handknitted, with short sleeves and turnover collars.

Lipstick Rouge Important Color

A clear, yellow red, called in Paris "lipstick rouge," is an important color. It is shown in every collection in every medium, and for entire hats, or in details.

Dresses of elaborate type introduce ropes of novel ornaments that cover the decolletage at the back. Capes embroidered in paillettes continue to be shown with any number of dresses. Yellow should be considered as one of the major color considerations this season.

Old Coin Designs New Button Trick

Paris, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Old gold coin designs are a new trick in buttons.

The buttons, about the size of a half dollar, are treated by a process which gives them the effect of being genuinely old. They are a favorite accent for black crepe afternoon frocks.

Picturesque Offerings In Lace Shown for Ball

Beauty of 1933 Fashions Challenges Descriptive Power; Special Exhibition of Accessories New Feature; Mannish Shoes More Numerous.

Telephone questions on The Meanderer's column in The Washington Post, National 4205, Extension 19; or address The Meanderer, The Washington Post, inclosing self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

By THE MEANDERER.

CLOTHES requirements for the inaugural festivities are given full cognizance by Washington's fashion emporiums. The windows in the shopping district are putting forth entrancing showings of new gowns for the all-important events of the very early days of March. This week one shop invited its customers for an inaugural fashion show where models showed in alluring manner the various costume needs for both daytime and evening.

Picturesque, indeed, are the suggestions for inaugural ball gowns; so much so that our daughters and granddaughters will delight in cherishing the gowns we wear as romantic keepsakes. Lace—much, much lace; net in ruffled swirls—billows and billows of net, and often to increase the charm—the lace, net and other gossamer fabrics are starched! Crisp, fairylike fashions they are. The width of the skirts is nearly as unbelievable as that of the Colonial day. Ruffled, matching shoulder capes lend their aid to the romantic aspect of the costume in a most becoming way. The Meanderer will never have enough room to do justice to the beauty of the 1933 inaugural fashions. From now until the great day these fashions are to be exploited, as they so well deserve to be.

As spring clothes become facts, not contemplations, one department store this week realized that accessories are to come close after the facts, and staged a most attractive accessory show, probably the first of its kind Washington has seen. Models in the accessory show wore hats, gloves, shoes and costume jewelry in various colors, and carried bags in like colors, changing the accessory appointments to show the several color changes possible with each costume.

For instance, Miss Betty Glassford, lovely daughter of Gen. Glassford, modeled a beige tweed cape suit for spring with red, brown and white accessories, thereby making a distinctively different costume by changing only her hat, shoes, gloves, bag and bracelets. A white felt hat, wide white bracelets, a white bag and white shoes were most effective as this brunette model combined them with the beige tweed suit.

An Oxford gray cloth coat lost much of the mannish aspect so often apparent in Oxford gray, when it was shown trimmed in elbow cuffs of silver fox, and worn by a silver-haired matronly model in the accessory show. A felt hat of the model known as "Smilin' Through," in pale gray and harmonizing pale gray accessories made this combination of grays most effective. This Oxford gray coat is reasonably priced at $39.50.

"Twink" is the name of a very new model of spring felt hat for $5, deriving its title, of course, from the famous English horse. The crown of the hat "Twink" is fashioned after the Prince of Wales bowler, and a generous rolling brim is added to produce general becomingness.

New little breakfast coats of taffeta in dainty colors, puffed as to sleeves, many trimmed with frills and lace cost as little as $5.95 and $8.95 in a department store on Eleventh street.

Mannish shoes for women are more numerous in spring displays than they have been for many years, due to the heavy importance of the mannish mode for 1933. The "kiltie," a calf Oxford with fringed leather fastening, is a popular mannish street style. One shop has offered a large display of natural color buckskin sport shoes in various models for wear with mannish clothes, at which many women window shoppers are gazing interestedly.

The "hot-cha" suede jackets of much-abbreviated length, adopted by those with collegiate air, or by the high school miss fond of skating, cost only $5.95 in a big department store between Seventh and Eighth streets.

Dull rose color, known as Dyjoy rose is combined with gold in one of the prettiest spring dresses the Meanderer has seen. The frock and sleeveless accompanying coat are of gold crepe, and the touch of rose crepe is in a vestee-yoke effect in the dress. Its tag reads $29.75.

A spring suit of deep tan flannel, has a smart mannish jacket and two skirts. One skirt matches the jacket and the other is of harmonizing tweed. The coat is only $10.50.

New, t-strap sandals in dark perforated leathers, with straps much wider than heretofore worn, are meeting with favor in a popular-priced shoe house.

Hints Given How to Be Happy in Rain

Rain Kit Will Do It, in Which One May Carry Needed Rubber Apparel.

By DARE.

NOW is there anything elegant, chic, or even the least bit appealing about a sodden lady whose appearance betrays her discomfort, whose anxiety presages the sniffles, and whose irritation portends a quarrel? Oh, of course, the lovely ladies who never, never go out in the rain anyhow—or who are exposed, at the very most, to five feet of awning-covered, doorman-and-umbrella-enveloped protection between the door and one's own limousine or at least de luxe taxi, never show any of the above-mentioned uglinesses. But then—why mention these damsels? Why not give the rest of us a substantial hint about how to be happy and elegant and lovely in any rain? Or in as much of it as we encounter?

The business girl is, of course, the biggest rain sufferer—as an individual and as a whole. She must go to work and home from work, and probably out to luncheon and back again, whether it rains or pours. And she should do it gracefully, with the minimum of wear and tear on her clothing, disposition, health and employer's nerves. The next biggest rain sufferer is the housewife who does her own marketing, or, at least, shopping. And then all the other women who, for careers or pleasure, must brave the rain more or less often. Not to mention the traveler!

Once upon a time, then, raincoats and rubbers were a most horrid sound! Because they were objects which were most horrid in themselves. But one might have guessed that Dame Fashion and the modern woman wouldn't let that state of affairs continue long. And they didn't. Today's raincoat is chic, flattering, becoming, actually rainproof and inexpensive. And today's galoshes are cunning, to say the least.

From Raincoats to Galoshes.

One has a choice of any type of raincoat, and a dozen different rubbers, from little thin and chic ones that fit into the handbag, to zipped and flanneled topped, sturdy galoshes. And according to one's requirements does one choose. From the transparent raincoat under which one wears an every-day and warm coat or tailored suit, to the tweed-lined and waterproofed coats that give all the warmth and protection necessary, with a few weights and different degrees of warmth-giving raincoats between, just decide what you most need, and get it. The same for the galoshes—it all depends upon just how much rain you are actually going to be in.

Now I can hear you say, yes, and raincoat and galoshes aren't enough for any subway exit or any campus! And they aren't, either. One has to think of hats, gloves, purses and even stockings. But a clever woman solves everything, my deah—and here's what I suggest:

'Tis my own idea, of course, but yours if you think it the most practical rain idea of all, as I do First, the transparent raincoat, loose in armholes and sleeves, and long enough to cover everything, is my choice. The reason is because it can be worn over anything, even over a flat fur coat and over one's one-piece dress for spring. I like the way it adapts itself to any temperature as well as to rain, that's all. And I haven't had enough rainy weather in my life to need a more substantial raincoat. Another thing, I like the way this kind of a raincoat wraps up into such a small bundle.

Rain Kit Is the Thing.

Because I have a rain kit! Yes, I have—and if enough lovely ladies cut this out and send it to any well-known rubber goods company I'll bet you will have the same kind of a kit on the market in no time, so you can have one, too. For my rain kit is nothing more mysterious than a smallish leather bag, rainproofed, with two sides to it inside, each side separated from the other by partitions. And into this bag, which opens with a slide fastener, by the way, is carried my raincoat in one side and in the other a beret, a clean pair of stockings, rubbers and suede-lined waterproof gloves.

But if you think this sounds like a bore, think of this: when it rains, I just take out the raincoat and put it on over whatever I happen to be wearing in the way of another coat or suit, then I take out the rubbers and put them on over my pumps, and substitute the rain-proofed gloves for those I am wearing, as well as the beret for my perfectly good hat, which would undoubtedly be spoiled in the rain. But here's the best part—into the compartment where the raincoat was goes my good hat! And into the other side of the rain kit go my perishable gloves and my handbag—where they just exactly stay, all snug and dry, until I am quite ready to take them out and put the waterproofed ones back into their rain kit—along with the raincoat!

Hand-Knit Bags for Mannequins

Mannequins carry hand-knit bags and wear three-cornered knitted caps. The sailor receives much encouragement and is shown in effective plaid straws as well as solid colors. Stitched taffeta is sponsored in small hats for town wear which may or may not have flower trimmings. Many of these are very youthful, with narrow brims dipped close to the hair in back, or with shallow square crowns worn fairly straight.

Among the formal types, flower toques are featured, particularly for afternoon wear, some fashioned of flat petals and complemented by a veil. Another crown which is being maintained and strengthened is the paper bag crown of Schiaparelli, which is appearing in a number of different versions.

Placket Effects Brought Into Use

Buttons are very much in evidence, but have subsided to a more conventional style, leaving the quality of novelty to the new fabrics. Plain glass buttons, in ball or flat shapes, and mother of pearl, generally flat, are taking the place of the metals of the winter, although there are still some shiny nickel types—smooth and undecorated.

Talking of buttons is another way of saying that placket effects are repeatedly brought into use—a feature that can be said of skirts as well as of blouses. In the matter of skirts plackets are apt to appear anywhere—front, back, and in mock style, at the bottom near the hem.

Soroptimists Addressed by Glassford

Reveals Plans for Expenditure of $50,000 in Camps for Homeless Youths.

An expenditure of $50,000 for the first camp for homeless boys is planned by Brig. Gen. Pelham D. Glassford, he revealed Wednesday at the luncheon meeting of the Soroptimist Club. The camp near Washington is to be the first link in a chain of several hundred throughout the country and will run as an experiment in education, Gen. Glassford told the club.

His organization is also planning to open a self supporting lunch room on Pennsylvania avenue between Nineteenth and Twentieth streets northwest, about March 15 to relieve a number of the jobless, he said. Meals will be sold for a few cents.

Under present plans, Gen. Glassford said, the camp will utilize 1,000 acres of land and $10,000 will be used in the purchase of this tract. The remainder of the sum he proposes to raise will be spent for buildings, food, clothing and equipment.

A poultry and stock farm will be organized in connection with the project and the boys who come under the camp's care will be instructed in the most modern methods of farming, cattle and poultry raising. After the camp becomes self-supporting, Gen. Glassford said, it was hoped to give attention to other arts and industries. The camp at first will be financed by private subscription.

A guest home will be erected on the land for the use of those who wish to study its operation with the view of starting other camps.

"We will be looking forward to the end of the depression," Gen. Glassford said, "and when we're no longer able to fill it with recruits, we hope to sell it at a higher price and reimburse those who have donated to the project."

A group of songs was presented by Miss Jean Bishop, radio singer, accompanied by Jewel Downs, a member of the club. Miss Betty Glassford, daughter of Gen. Glassford, was a guest of the club. The attendance prize given by Mary V. Judge was won by Emma A. Buechele.

Daughters of 1812

The Rev. Dr. Robert Shores spoke on "Patriotic Education of Children," stressing the importance of such instruction in schools at a meeting of the District of Columbia Chapter of the Daughters of 1812 held Tuesday at national headquarters, 1461 Rhode Island avenue northwest.

Many Projects Given Support By First Lady

Appreciation Is Felt in All Circles Irrespective of Politics.

By VYLLA POE WILSON.

DESPITE that the Washington clubwomen are engaged in making the inauguration this time a notable one in the history of the Capital, they are also uniting to make the last few weeks of the presence of Mrs. Herbert Hoover in their midst as First Lady of the Land memorable. Irrespective of political creeds and convictions, the women of Washington are as one in wishing Mrs. Hoover luck in their eagerness to express their appreciation to her of the support and encouragement she has given to the many projects, civic, charitable and educational, in which many different groups of Washington women are engaged.

Mrs. Hoover has been an asset to any organization to which she has given her name and support. She has not taken her memberships lightly, not even the honorary positions she has accepted. Mrs. Hoover has been counted on in many of the movements which are now well under way for the good of the schools, and welfare agencies in Washington, and the splendid progress and state of the Girl Scouts in Washington owes much to her leadership and activity.

It was Mrs. Hoover who negotiated with the General Federation of Women's Clubs to secure the model home designed after that of the writer of "Home, Sweet Home," John Howard Payne, now the headquarters of the Girl Scouts of Washington. This house has been used by the federation for the Nation-wide better homes campaign.

Mrs. Hoover has always been free in expressing her opinions at the meetings and gatherings which she attended because she has realized that the members of the organization or the newspapers present would not quote her unless given special permission to do so. This permission has been graciously forthcoming on many occasions. So at the luncheon and teas and farewell parties for Mrs. Hoover which just now form an important part of the club schedules, Washington women of Democratic and Republican affiliation gather to pay tribute to the leadership among women of Mrs. Hoover.

One of the most interesting meetings which has taken place in Washington recently was that held at the Sulgrave Club on Thursday morning when Mrs. Mary Breckenridge, volunteer director of the Frontier Nursing Service, Incorporated, told of the work carried on by the service in carrying medical aid to the women of the mountains, thus bringing down the rate of maternity and infancy deaths. Mrs. Breckenridge showed pictures of the nurses on their errands of mercy riding horseback across the mountains of the South in all kinds of weather.

The work of Mrs. Breckenridge has always received enthusiastic support from Washington women, a fact that was brought out by Mrs. Cary T. Grayson, who as president of the Junior League, assisted in this work. Mrs. Grayson introduced Mrs. Breckenridge.

Mrs. Breckenridge will lead the distinguished group of men and women interested in this work and their friends on a cruise to the West Indies February 25 to March 12 being organized for the benefit of the work of the Frontier Nursing Service.

At the Chess Table

By WILLARD H. MUTCHLER.

Vladimir Sournin retains his title of tournament chess champion of the District of Columbia for another year. Last Tuesday he defeated G. E. Bishop in the decisive game and finished half a game to the fore in the final standing. Ergo, congratulations are in order—the more so because this is the second consecutive time Sournin has acquired the titular honors. The champion lost his initial encounter with Bishop, whose draw with E. L. Jeffers proved his undoing in the last analysis. The outstanding players at the conclusion of the event, and the final game of the tourney are appended.

V. Sournin	3	1
G. E. Bishop	2½	1½

Sournin writes us as following regarding his victory: "The game was short and sweet for me. It was a game of strategy; I maneuvered with my Kts. very cleverly until I got considerable grip on him and after he castled on the Qs side I obtained an irresistible attack. After exchanging several pieces, I began to chase His Majesty, the King, and in the end I captured his Q by a pretty combination on the thirty-first move After that he might as well resign."

A. W. Fox Exhibits.

Albert W. Fox, well-known local lawyer and admittedly one of the foremost master players in this section of the country, emerged from his chessic inactivities to trounce a gathering of 36 players in simultaneous play at the Jewish Community Center last Tuesday evening. Fox finished with a score of 22 wins, 13 draws and 1 loss, and left his opponents with a hearty respect for his prowess. The lone win was credited by the adjudicators to Milton Mitchell, as were also 11 or the 13 draw games.

Fox proceeded cautiously throughout the evening, with the result that many of the games were barely beyond the opening stages when the adjudicators were called upon to render their decisions. I. S. Turover, W. K. Wimsatt, G. E. Bishop and W. H. Mutchler collaborated in deciding the results of the unfinished games, of which there were 21.

Some idea of the forcefulness of Fox's moves may be gleaned when it is realized that of the 15 games which he brought to a close scarcely any had exceeded 20 moves. L. P. Sherfy gave the master the hardest battle of the evening, and at one stage had a two-pawn advantage. When Fox, however, elected to conclude the game he turned the tables in short order.

The lone player was introduced by W. K. Wimsatt, who paid him sterling tribute for his past achievements in the chess world. Fox related two amusing incidents worth repetition here. He explained how the sobriquet of "mystery man" came to be applied to him in bygone days. At the tender age of 15 he was attending school in Paris, France, where the students were guarded with Puritan strictness. The lure of chess proving stronger than the laws of the institution, young Albert clandestinely slipped away to enter a tournament at the famous Cafe de la Regeance, participating without so much as employing name or pseudonym. And he won the event and became thereby the "mystery man" of chess!

Again, at Heidelberg, Germany, he witnessed this incident: A stout elderly player sauntered into a coffeehouse in search of chess play. His glance centered on a comparatively young man whom he invited to combat. Conscious of his own abilities and fearful lest the young man should be unable to cope with him on even terms, he aired his views to his erstwhile opponent and explained that odds of a rook were appropriate to the occasion. The young man acquiesced and the elder won the first game. Whereupon the youth elucidated that in his opinion the fact that he accepted odds of a rook was to his disadvantage; for he had a theory that the rookless player could the quicker develop his pieces for attack—hence why should the odds-giver not win always. And to prove his theory he offered to try his hand at giving the odds. Agreed. The youth won. And alternately for some 20-odd games each gave rook odds, and each time the odds-giver won! The sequel developed that the youth was none other than Emanuel Lasker, even then world's champion, who doubtless was enjoying every moment of his comedy.

But space as well as time flys, so on to the summary of the Fox victory.

KING OF THE JUNGLE

by

CHARLES THURLEY STONEHAM

SYNOPSIS.

Madeline Moore comes to Africa with Martin Sefton to look for her lover, Kaspa, the lion-man raised by a lioness, who had been brought to Canada, inherited a fortune, and then returned to his native jungle. Also in the party are Kaspa's relatives, Lucian and Sheila Marley and Sheila's husband, Harland Reeves. Lucian and Reeves plan to kill Kaspa, so that they would get his money. Reeves steals away with a rifle to shoot Kaspa. Kaspa, surrounded by his lion friends, discovers his presence, and is slowly creeping up on him when Madeline appears on the scene.

CHAPTER XXIX.

SHE saw Reeves coming toward her, rifle in hand, and something made her suspect his purpose in being abroad at that early hour. She knew that the stockbroker had never forgiven Kaspa for manhandling him, and had always cherished the hope of meeting the lion-man again and reversing the decision. Reeves had his fair share of the spirit that does not recognize defeat, and the girl felt a certain sympathy with him, but she had no wish for these two enemies to encounter each other again.

She awaited Reeves, to remonstrate with him for his solitary hunting, which she was convinced was inspired by his wish to catch Kaspa at his nocturnal pursuits. As she revolved these thoughts in her mind, she noticed Reeves was acting in a peculiar way. He peered at each bush and rock before he approached it, and then hurried past as though fearful that it hid an enemy that would pounce upon him; he kept wheeling suddenly and looking behind him, holding his rifle at the ready.

In another moment she realized the reason for these maneuvers. Reeves passed a patch of tangled bush after subjecting it to a keen scrutiny, and immediately a big shadowy figure leaped out from amid the leaves and ran with the speed of a leopard upon the unconscious man. Madeline screamed, and Reeves spun round, but he was too late. Kaspa reached him and, grasping the rifle with one hand, struck him down with the other. Luckily for Reeves he managed to break the force of the blow with his upraised forearm, but nevertheless he was felled as completely as a pole-axed bullock.

Kaspa cast the rifle aside and seized upon his fallen foe. The river at this point ran deep, in a gorge 30 feet below the trail. The lion-man intended to cast the unconscious form of Reeves into this chasm. There was no thought of mercy in his mind. Reeves had set out to shoot him and had failed; he must now pay the penalty of his rashness, according to the law of the wilderness. Kaspa had spared him once, and thereby laid himself open to renewed attacks. He congratulated himself that there was no one to interfere on this occasion—and then he saw Madeline racing toward him along the narrow track.

Kaspa paused in his act of casting his victim into the boiling flood below. He looked at the girl in mute interrogation.

"Kaspa, for heaven's sake don't kill him!" gasped Madeline. "You mustn't!—you hear? You mustn't!" She stamped her foot in the vehemence of her effort to avert the tragedy that would, she knew, bring such dreadful consequences upon her lover. Kaspa's expression terrified her. His eyes had that same red glare in them that they had held when he had fought the baboons—an inhuman light, cruel and remorseless. Great tears gathered in the girl's eyes; she beat her hands together in the agony of her distress.

She knew instinctively that Reeves had again done something to arouse Kaspa's wrath, and she was in momentary fear that the lion-man would disregard her entreaties and with a single motion cast the helpless man to his death, as easily as he had cast him out into Lake Scugog upon that other occasion. Once that die was cast, all her prayers and his remorse could not remedy matters; Kaspa would be a murderer and, since he would never allow himself to be captured, he would be shot down by the men sent to arrest him. She saw the whole ghastly business in a flash of intense horror.

The deed must be prevented at all costs. Once get Reeves out of the lion-man's clutches to a place of safety, and explanations could follow. It was significant that at that moment she had no pity to spare for Reeves; all her energies were devoted to preventing her lover from committing an unforgivable crime. But Kaspa thought otherwise.

"What is he to you?" he growled, still holding the slowly recovering Reeves in a grasp of iron.

Madeline looked into those fiery yellow eyes and made up her mind upon the instant. "I love him!" she said clearly.

Kaspa's gaze flickered. He winced as though from a blow. Then suddenly he dropped the stunned man upon the grass, turned and was gone, leaving Madeline standing there uncertain whether to exult or despair at the success of her ruse. After a moment she smiled. Kaspa had been saved from committing murder, which was the important thing; she could explain the matter at their next meeting, which she determined should not be long delayed. There had been no doubt of the wild man's feelings when he heard that she loved another, and Madeline felt inclined to laugh with a new happiness at the thought of what portended. Kaspa had given himself away badly.

Reeves sat up, feeling his arm, which he thought broken. "That is the second time," he said slowly. "The third time will be my finish. Madeline, I'm going to make my getaway out of this country. I know when I've had enough."

She smiled at him. "Why not make it up with Kaspa? He will be your friend if you will let him, I feel sure." She blushed and added diffidently: "You might also assure him that what I said had no foundation of truth."

Reeves looked puzzled. "What did you say? I was a bit muzzy, and I can't remember."

"Never mind," said Madeline, turning away. "It was of no consequence. Are you able to walk along to camp? It is only just around the corner."

Reeves said he was, and proved the truth of his assertion by struggling to his feet and starting off. Madeline cast a long searching glance into the thinning mist where Kaspa had disappeared, before she followed, but the lion-man was far away over the veld by that time.

In camp, over a cup of tea before the fire, Reeves made a resolution; it was that he would return to Nyoka without delay, and never again go looking for trouble with lions.

"Once is enough for me," he said decidedly. "I spent the worst hour of my career walking over the veld with those demons all about me. I never want to hear a lion roar again."

Sefton, who had listened to the stockbroker's story without comment, drew Madeline aside out of ear-shot, and showed her a scrap of bark upon which some words had been traced, apparently with a burnt stick.

"Martin, follow the stream along to the big rock in the forest at moonrise. I will be there," the girl read.

"This was lying on my pillow this morning when I woke up," Sefton told her. "I think Kaspa must have stolen into camp last night and left this message for me."

Madeline's eyes began to shine. "I will come with you to that trysting place, Martin," she said softly. Sefton nodded. "It was my intention to ask you," he said quietly.

Jan Cloete came toward them, and Madeline thanked her friend with a look as she turned to greet the Dutchman. "Now I suppose today we go looking for these lions," said the hunter. "They have made a kill up on the plain, and I will track them from it to their lair."

Sefton told him that as far as he was concerned there would be no hunting that day, and Madeline seconded his resolution.

"Ah, then I must go alone," said Cloete, "for Mr. Reeves, he is not able."

"I will come with you," offered Lucian, who seemed to Cloete to be following him wherever he went. The Dutchman gave him a mocking glance, but he made no remark. Lucian was in an awkward position. He had never discussed the arrangement for Kaspa's taking-off with the hunter, but he had reason to believe that Grant had done so. In the circumstances he felt unable to make any reference to a compact which was of so delicate a nature that the true meaning of it had never been put into words.

He had signed a paper (now in Grant's possession), offering a large sum of money for proof of Kaspa's death; but Kaspa was very much alive, and they all knew it. Any allusion to this curious bargain would depict him in the unpleasant light of accessory to his cousin's murder, and Lucian shrank from admitting yet another person into his guilty secret. As things stood at present he could explain that he had been convinced of Kaspa's death and was endeavoring to establish the truth of it. He clung to this evasion with all the desperation of his weak character; but though he was prepared to incur Grant's wrath by repudiating all agreements with him, he was in deadly fear that Cloete would carry out his part of the bargain, and by shooting Kaspa establish Lucian as the instigator of the deed.

He felt that the only way to prevent this was by never letting the Dutchman out of his sight. Accordingly he followed Cloete about the camp, and prepared himself to take the field, as the hunter's assistant, at any moment of the day or night.

When Lucian announced his intention of going hunting that morning it did not defeat Cloete; it merely delayed him. He accepted the inevitable with the patience of one who has lived most of his life in contact with natural forces which refuse to be hurried. Cloete was also a fatalist.

They started out after breakfast and trekked all day over the veld and among the rocks; but when Lucian returned at dusk, footsore and dispirited, he had the satisfaction of knowing that Cloete seemed as puzzled about Kaspa's place of concealment as was everyone else.

The remainder of the party had spent a quiet day. Reeves and his wife loafed about the camp while Sefton and Madeline visited the spot where they were to meet Kaspa that night. Madeline sighed happily as she thought of the meeting to come. She loved him with all her heart and soul and asked nothing better than to share his lot. She was confident that the night would at last bring happiness.

At ten o'clock the moon rose, and before its red rim had climbed clear of the horizon, Madeline and Sefton took the forest path along the river. Jan Cloete waited until they were well out of camp and then picked up his rifle and followed. Overhearing a portion of Sefton's conversation with Madeline that morning, he knew an assignation had been reached for that evening and reasoned that after Kaspa had concluded his interview with the young people, he could trail him until out of sound of the camp and then shoot him. The hunter was unaware that he was stealthily being followed by Lucian. Following Sefton's nailed boots in the mud, he almost bumped into the people he was following in front of the big rock. He retired noiselessly and hid. Lucian crouched behind him, unable to see what the hunter was watching but content with a position which allowed him to view all Cloete's movements.

Madeline had decided upon her course of action. She wished Martin to meet Kaspa first and to explain to him the cause of their journey to Africa, and the reason of her declaration of the morning, the purpose of which had been to save Reeves' life. When this had been accomplished, and the lion-man pacified, she would make her appearance. She concealed herself in a thicket close by, and left Sefton alone in the glade.

With the first glimmer of the moonlight, low down through the trees, Kaspa stepped out of the brush so silently that Sefton was unaware of his presence until he heard his low greeting in his ear and turned to grasp his friend's hand.

KASPA looked keenly at him, then he raised his head and sniffed. The action disconcerted Sefton. He gave a forced laugh and spoke quite differently from what he had intended. The sight of that gigantic figure, so familiar to him, excited him and filled his breast with emotions which he attempted to conceal behind a flippant manner.

"Hello, Kaspa, old man! I am glad to see you." It sounded foolish in his own ears, and the thought of what Madeline must be thinking of him made him curse himself for a self-conscious fool. Kaspa regarded him curiously out of watchful yellow eyes. He sniffed again. "Where is the girl?" he said suddenly. Sefton giggled.

"She is in camp, Kaspa." His one thought was to keep his promise to Madeline and to prevent Kaspa from departing into the forest without hearing her story, a development they both feared. Kaspa looked steadily at his friend. There was a trace of scorn in his expression.

"I have a lot to tell you, old man," began Martin hurriedly. "Madeline wants to talk to you. You must give her an opportunity to do so."

NO. 17.

LOSSES ON STOCK TRANSACTIONS.

No gain or loss is recognized for income tax purposes as a result of the exchange of stock or securities in a corporation solely for stock or securities of another corporation in pursuance of a plan of reorganization to which both corporations are parties or as a result of the exchange of stock or securities in a corporation solely for stock or securities in the same corporation in connection with a recapitalization. Where money or other property is received along with such exchanges, no loss is recognized, although a taxable gain may result. The statute also prohibits the deduction for any loss from the sale or other disposition of stock or securities where the taxpayer, within a period of 30 days before or after the date of sale or other disposition, acquires or enters into a contract or option to acquire substantially identical stock or securities.

The treatment of gains and losses resulting from the sale or exchange of capital assets under the revenue act of 1932 remains the same as it was under the revenue act of 1928. The term "capital assets" means with certain exceptions property held by the taxpayer for a period of more than two years, and such property, of course, includes stocks and securities. In the case of an individual, any loss sustained in respect of capital assets is first offset against any gains from such source. A capital net gain may, at the election of the taxpayer other than a corporation, be taxed at the rate of 12½ per cent instead of the regular rates for computing the normal tax and surtax on ordinary income. No election is allowed, however, with respect to the treatment of a capital net loss, as the reduction in the amount of the tax liability as a result of such capital net loss is limited to 12½ per cent thereof. The amount of the tax payable in such case is subject to the further provision that in no case is the amount of tax to be less than it would be if computed without regard to the capital net loss provision.

Playground Activities

Citizens of the Northeast who have waited long for the replacement of Plaza Playground are rapidly approaching the end of their struggle for recreational facilities in their neighborhood. And their hard, earnest endeavors have been crowned with success.

The District Commissioners requested Lieut. Col. U. S. Grant 3d, executive secretary of the National Park and Planning Commission, to turn over to them the premises of 615-617 Ninth street northeast immediately. The request was granted. The other lots in the square are to be formally given to the District July 1.

The buildings that are available now are to be used as a community recreation center. The playground department will cooperate with the Children's Bureau of the Department of Labor in a program for boys and girls. Miss Ella Gardner, of the Child Labor Bureau, will devote considerable time at the buildings studying conditions and acting in an advisory capacity.

A combined meeting of several groups interested in stamp clubs will meet in Room 506 of the District Building tomorrow night at 8 o'clock to discuss plans stimulating interest. Mr. Albert F. Kunze, president of the local Philatelic Club, will preside.

Playground boys are keenly interested in the inaugural committee's only sport feature, the Indian ball game to be played at Central High School. The committee is letting the youngsters attend for half price.

Miss Maude N. Parker, director of girls' and women's activities in the playground department, started last week on the fourth year of her lecture course at George Washington University. Miss Parker lectures on practical playground problems and administration and also gives demonstrations. It is a part of the university's physical education course.

Several playgrounds now have well organized clubs and are holding regular weekly meetings. The majority of playground directors will attend the meeting tomorrow and with Mr. Kunze's assistance it is expected that several additional ones will come into existence.

Wedding bells have been ringing loud and frequently among the playground workers. Charles Ourand and Franklin Carr recently announced their weddings and Miss Virginia Story, director of Eckington, is to be married on March 1.

Dr. H. C. Bryant, assistant director of the National Park Service, in charge of the educational service in public parks, will address the playground workers at the staff meeting Tuesday morning. His topic will be "Nature Observations as a Recreational Activity." Nature study has an important part on the playground program.

The jig saw puzzle library contemplated by Miss Sibyl Baker is now a reality. The library, playground headquarters, room 313 District Building, has received numerous puzzles and any that have been tired of by others will be gratefully received.

Device to Record Astral Heat Closely

New Instrument Based on Thermostat Principle at Smithsonian.

A measuring device which will record the heat of a burning match a mile distant is crude when it is compared to a new heat measurer announced by the Smithsonian Institution.

This new device, the kampometer it is called, is an invention of Dr. Charles G. Abbot, secretary of the institution, and might be described roughly as an extreme adaptation of the principle of the thermostat used to regulate heat in houses, for it combines the use of unequal expansion of two metals with an application of opposing magnetic fields.

It is for the use of astronomers in making direct measurements of the heat of distant stars and of the temperature of selected areas on the surface of planets.

Monroe Contest Ends Wednesday

High School Students Are Interested in Essays on Doctrine.

The essay contest for public, parochial and private junior and senior high schools in the District of Columbia and Maryland on the Monroe Doctrine, conducted by the Fourth Degree, Knights of Columbus, will close Wednesday at midnight, it was anounced by Arthur B. J. Williamson, master of the Fourth Degree, in charge of the contest.

A keen interest has been shown by pupils here and in Maryland. This is the first year the contest has been held in this jurisdiction, although it has been conducted by the Knights of Columbus in other parts of the country for the past 25 years.

Three local prizes will be awarded. The winner of the first prize becomes eligible with winners from other States for national competition. Local judges will be announced at the close of the contest.

AMMONIA GAS FOUND ON DISTANT PLANETS

Dr. Dunham Says He Made Discovery by Checking Spectrum Lines.

Los Angeles, Feb. 18 (A.P.).—Working much as a layman putting together a jigsaw puzzle, an astronomer at the Carnegie Institution's Mount Wilson Observatory has for the first time established the existence of ammonia gas on a planet.

Suggestion that the gas might be found on Jupiter and Saturn was made by an astronomer in Germany several months ago. Dr. Theodore Dunham, jr., following his lead, said here he had obtained spectra which confirm the presence of ammonia gas on the two planets.

"It's much like solving a jigsaw puzzle," said Dr. Dunham. "You have the pattern of lines in the spectrum of a planet and you try to find the spectrum of a known gas to fit it.

"In this instance, a pipe 65 feet long was filled with ammonia and a beam of light passed through it twice by reflection. This light was analyzed by means of a spectrograph and found to show exactly the same pattern of spectral lines found in the light from Jupiter and Saturn."

Recently Dr. Dunham and Dr. Walter S. Adams, director of the observatory, announced the discovery of carbon dioxide on Venus and now are investigating to determine the amount of oxygen on Mars.

"Jupiter, Saturn and Venus all are surrounded by clouds which make it impossible to determine actual conditions on the planets themselves," Dr. Dunham said, "but it is to be presumed that elements existing in their outer atmosphere also are present at their surface."

Astronomers consider extremely remote the possibility of life existing on either Jupiter or Saturn, such as is found on the earth. Jupiter is about five and Saturn nine times as far as the earth is from the sun and therefore are much colder. The earth's stratosphere is about 50 degrees centigrade below zero and that of Jupiter and Saturn more than 100 below.

Dr. Dunham is yet unable to estimate the amount of ammonia gas on the two planets, but said it was more pronounced on Jupiter than on Saturn.

Maj. Stewart Giffin Transferred.

Maj. Stewart S. Giffin, Coast Artillery Corps, has been relieved from duty in the office of the Chief of Coast Artillery, here and will go to Fort Totten, N. Y., according to recent orders issued at the War Department.

That Paris Is in a Whimsical Mood Is Evidenced as Her Style Arbiters Disclose What the Well-Dressed Woman Will Wear This Spring; Accessories Offer Many Novel Effects

By Eva A. Tingey

Paris.

IN THE spring, they tell us, a young man's fancy lightly turns to love. In these modern days let us say: "A young maid's fancy turns to fashions, frills and furbelows."

Spring may not be exactly with most of us, yet she is only a month away, and naturally milady's principal thought these days is: "What is Paris going to give us?"

This spring Paris is in a whimsical mood. If we can't have much in our pockets, let's have something up our sleeves, she suggests, and so in her own inimitable way she handles the situation, molding it to her own advantage and pleasure.

Pockets! Well, what's the use of them? she shrugs. Just don't let's have any! —but come to think of it, what was Lelong doing with two little V-shaped pockets for all the world like offertory bags at the back of an evening dress decolletage? No, it hasn't quite come to that, Mr. Lelong, but it's a delicate idea, nevertheless. We'll keep it in mind!

So Fashion has decided that slim skirts with unbroken hiplines are much more elegant anyway, and having done that she dismisses the subject of skirts, except in a few instances when, being safely past the pocket area, she expresses her returning consideration for hems by allowing some of them pleats.

BUT what has Fashion up her sleeve? Not the conjurer's rabbit, for she never brings it down and lets us into the secret. She just shifts the mystery about with, it must be confessed, a preference for the upper arm. Perhaps she wants to give the impression that we have our muscle up for all the problems about us. Whatever her reason, however, she is being mighty considerate concerning sleeves.

Nearly all the new spring sleeves have been allowed extended holdings, so to speak. They have claimed land from bodices in a most alarming manner, until a sleeve that starts from "its own little hole" is almost unknown. There are raglan-set sleeves by the hundreds, especially for the sterner type of suit, coat and day frock. These may be slim and plain, but just as often they may have a pleat or two on the shoulder, and others from just above the elbow to the wrist, leaving slight fullness suggesting the leg o' mutton. Similar shapes, puffs like little balloons to watermelon shapes, gauntlet-like cuffs worn between shoulder and wrist, horizontal tucks and numberless devices, the more extravagant the older the day grows, and the more intricately they emanate from bodices, the more Fashion is pleased.

NEXT to sleeves let us take necklines, because since Fashion has chosen to keep interest high—in two senses—it is better to keep to the top and work downward.

Springtime necklines will be rather high or of modest decolletage. They will be draped, scarfed, decorated with delicate tucked designs, handwork or have round buttoned-down collars sometimes of pique. There will be bows, plaited thongs and dozens of different effects.

Now while the bodices remain important and skirts have a longish slender effect, the natural feeling for the waistline will be on the high side, though there are one or two indications that the waist is to become more movable and individual.

Colors will be a little less orthodox this spring. There is a definite interest in black, and the usual spring quota of navy and white, but colors like beige, gray, its combination, greige; reds, a tremendous range of pinks, usually of the stronger type; tones of burnt orange and yellow, chartreuse green, and old metal tones like old gold, copper, etc., are all to be well represented.

As for materials, kasha is planning a strong comeback, and I think will vie successfully with ribbed, wavy and crinkled woolens.

Blistered silks, with from quite small to fair sized markings, are to be popular, especially for evening. Creped satin jerseys, woolens very finely mixed with white rabbit hairs, honeycomb and cloque effects in wool or silk are all on the spring card. There is a good quota of the standard silks like marocain and flat crepe, while a little wool voile and silk marquisette is to be noted. Chapel shows gray woolen lattice worked over with red, also a new silky organdie of silk and linen threads.

Two-tone schemes are to be tremendously important. Sometimes they will be low in tone, as two grays or beiges varying only a few shades.

Often these two soft colors will mark a suit or walking frock, and as an accompaniment there will be worn two, three or four foxskins of similar varying tones.

In the stronger contrasts, it is remarkable how often velvet figures. Belts, especially for evening dresses, are lovely in some striking color as turquoise or pink against black, sapphire with pale blue satin, purple with orange marquisette, etc., or for day wear, dark brown with beige or orange.

Before leaving the subject of velvet, its relation to gloves must be definitely noted. The most effective gloves in corduroy and plain velvet are strongly presented for spring wear. Imagine, for instance, a brown woolen coat with a scarf, beret and gauntlets all of brown corduroy, or for the softer spring days a similar rig in some paler tone. Velvet gloves are also printed to emulate the zebra, the leopard and tiger, the first of these remarkably effective with a black and white rig. Other popular gloves are washable white "pecari"—a rather crinkly affect skin—and a good deal of suede.

THE above animals lead rather naturally to the question of fur. Here the lynx is very insistent. His long beige-white fur is seen trimming black broadcloth and marocain, and almost as often allied to beige. Then there is much fox, of course and a few of the shorter furs as astrakhan, sometimes very much in contrast, as, for instance, in black on bright chartreuse, or beige short-haired furs—often with matching woolens. Worth shows one such beige suit with a beige fur making a gauntlet-like cuff to meet the wide-ended sleeve. A fitted peplum is also of the fur.

Lots of gay stripes give singing color to what might otherwise be a sober sports frock. A pinafore or suspender dress of some darkish woolen will often take one's breath away by the colorful daring of its multicolored upper part and scarf. It is almost impossible to describe the "goings on" of fine knits and woolens in general. To say they have run riot is scarcely fair, but that they express themselves in a million unheard-of ways is very near the truth. Their versatility does not confine them to sports wear either. Fine woolens in the modish colors mentioned make the most delicious little day and afternoon dresses for spring wear.

WHILE all the plain and crepy silks are used for afternoon dresses, patterned ones are also shown. Jenny suggests spots. She has them from the size of peas to those of dollar dimensions. Frequently they strongly contrast their ground, the dress having perhaps yoke and large sleeve sections in the spot color. Mainbocher, on the other hand, shows zigzag stripes or conventionalized flower designs—these dresses with a scarf neckline which shows above the accompanying coat. These coats, with many buttons down a single-breasted closure, are collarless and cut round or square like a dress at the neck.

Here and there there is a feeling for the three-quarter coat. Schiaparelli has a lovely model in very dark brown over a golden brown frock, the entire rig in a bias shirred silk. At the neck, one of her new crinkly scarfs in pink finishes a very pleasing, unusual color scheme.

Cocktail party, cinema and informal evening rigs are expressed with great charm. Worth makes a lovely black-and-white crinkly satin ensemble. The slender, gracefully flaring skirt is topped by a white, fairly high necked bodice. Puff sleeves of black are set in raglan with shirring from the shoulder to neck. There is a fox-bordered cape of the satin to complete this elegant bit of dressing.

As for evening dresses, we seem to have collected all the devices of the Middle Ages until now to make their decolletages attractive. There never were so many neckline effects. Tremendously often the aforementioned velvet contrasts are used about the shoulders as pert bows, etc., or shapes inset into the straps, etc. There are scarfs which suggest sleeves, sleeves which are not really sleeves but an offshoot of the neckline when you come to analyze them. They just get you all bewildered to pieces when you try to straighten them out!

It will not be Chanel's fault if there is not tremendously revived interest in jewelry, especially diamonds. She has designed three graduated stars to fasten a capelet, with similar stars for hat and earrings. There is also a set of three bows. The stones are of moderate size. Yellow diamonds also have much favor. After all, it is time we had a rest from being beaded and braceleted like Central African natives.

HATS! Well, what shall I say of them! They are in an elusive mood. Like the "things" of Longfellow's poem, hats are not always what they seem. Many would lead you to believe they are berets, but they are not. They have mated in the most astonishing fashion, and their little halfcast offspring are remarkably attractive. There are tight crowns with a beret slipped forward well toward one side. There are tiny straw models with a rolled velvet edge and a jaunty little bow on the upturned side. Some women will like the little flat feather models in beige or gray to match ensembles of the same. A little black satin hat matching a coat, the upper part of which was satin, the lower cloth, was pretty for early spring. Felts, many in the softer colors, the crinkled and blistered silks, all are included in the new headgear, which is small and pert, and will undoubtedly remain so while Fashion continues to carry all the weight of extravagance about her shoulders.

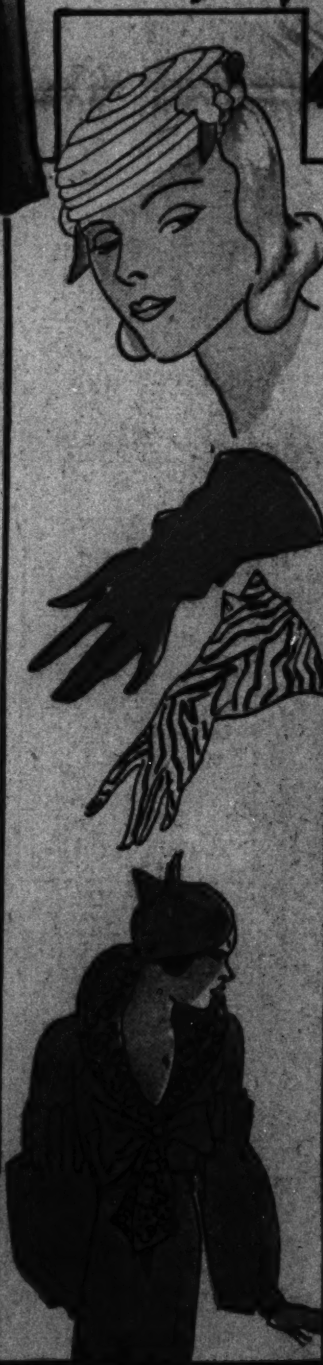
New Fashions

No. 1. Two-toned effects are going to be very popular. The ensemble here shown can be of two shades of blue, gray, beige or nearly allied colors. The fox furs can be harmonized with the colors, or in black and white.

No. 2. Schiaparelli offers a two-color ensemble of bias shiny silk, the jacket of three-quarter length.

No. 3. Solid blacks will be good, but they should be given a bright touch of metal jewelry. Note the silver ornaments on the hat, the scarf and the wide bracelet.

No. 4. Worth presents this black and white satin combination especially suitable for restaurant or the theatre. It is also good for informal evening wear.



At the top is shown a white satin turban trimmed with gardenias and a touch of colorful ribbon. Corduroy comes into a new use. Here is shown the red corduroy glove. And below that we have the new silk glove with zebra stripe effect. At the bottom is a new Bruyere effect, an astrakhan collar, tied with a bow of the same material as the coat

FEATHERED GLADIATORS

Gamest of all

Boxers, Wrestlers, Golfers, Football and Baseball Players Would Be Superb if They Possessed Such Determination, Courage and Stamina and Used Them When They Enter Athletic Games

The "champion" weighing in just before a feature bout which ended in a raid and fines for its spectators

By Myron R. Huff

HOW long would football, boxing, golf, baseball, rowing, wrestling, basketball, hockey and tennis continue as flourishing sports were they to be rigidly suppressed by State and national law—raided by authorities each time word went abroad such contests were in progress? A few years, probably. It is safe to predict all of them would die out within a generation or two.

Yet cockfighting, or, as the Spanish say it, rina o pelea de gallos, which has been known to history for at least 3000 years, although almost universally an object of suppression many centuries, still exists.

Cockfighting may not be the oldest competition in the world. Physical contact competitions between men, such as wrestling and boxing, probably preceded it, and a form of basketball was played by the ancient Mayas, yet not one of these games exists today as it was devised. On the other hand, cockfighting remains virtually as conducted from earliest times.

Pit games originated, it is believed, in India. At least, from this vast country, with its teeming, restless millions, came the Bankiva, or jungle fowl—to which the gamecock is most closely related—which Darwin, Blythe and other naturalists regard as the ancestor of all modern-day poultry.

CHINA, Persia and the Far East have known cockfighting for thousands of years. It was introduced into Greece about 500 B. C. by the warrior Themistocles, hero of the naval battle of Salamis. Themistocles, while marching against the Persians, history states, observed two game birds in desperate battle and called attention of his troops to their example of valor and obstinacy. The Greeks won the ensuing engagement and in celebration of the victory cockfights thenceforth were held annually at Athens.

A memorial of that era is yet to be seen in the ruins of the Theatre of Dionysus in Athens. On the back of the stone chair of the high priest is a beautifully carved figure of Eros, crouching with a gamecock about to be "pitted."

Cockfighting spread throughout Greece, Asia Minor and Sicily. Rome, for a time, pretended to despise cockfighting, but ended by adopting it with enthusiasm. Gradually, the matching of game birds spread to Great Britain, the Low Countries, Germany, Spain and their respective colonies.

Today, excepting the Far East, Spanish countries and former Castilian domains are the strongholds of cockfighting. In Cuba it is conducted under Government supervision, and in the Philippines, Borneo, Sumatra and Java, it is as popular with the natives as baseball and golf ever can hope to be in America, while it is an amusement in Mexico and South America of scarcely less degree.

Oddly enough, the Spaniards credit England with origination of cockfighting. The Spanish word for gamecock is gallo Ingles o de pelea, which, translated literally, means "English master of combat."

Pit games were an enthralling fad in Merry England years ago. So much so that it became a national schoolboy sport and great mains were held annually on Shrove Tuesday, personally directed by the masters. There was method in this apparent madness, for the custom was to present the dead birds to the school officials at the close of competition.

After the beheading of Charles I and the ascendancy of Oliver Cromwell, cockfighting was the target of a vigorous campaign of suppression, but continued under cover

At the height of its popularity in England, Henry VIII built the Royal Cockpit as a wing to his palace at Whitehall, and the Stuarts, particularly James I and Charles II, were enthusiastic devotees. In London some of the famous pits were those of Westminster, Drury Lane, Jewin Street and Birdcage Walk.

In 1614 one Gervase Markham published a book, "The Pleasures of Princess," which devoted a chapter to "choyce, ordring, breeding and dyeting of the fighting cocke for battell," which, while humorous today because of its stilted, old-fashioned language and spelling, is illuminating also because it so aptly describes the training of game chickens, a system generally in use today with but minor changes.

MARKHAM advises that a game bird being prepared for "battell" should, for the last three or four days preceding action, be fed only old maunchet (fine white bread) and spring water. He then advises the bird be set to spar with another, "putting a payre of hots upon each of their heels, which hots are soft, bumbasted roules of leather, covering their spurs, so that they cannot hurt each other. Let them fight and buffet one another a good pace."

Afterward, Markham directed, "put the chicken in a basket, covered with hay, and set him near the fyre. Then let him sweate, for the nature of this scowring is to bring away his grease and to breed breath and strength."

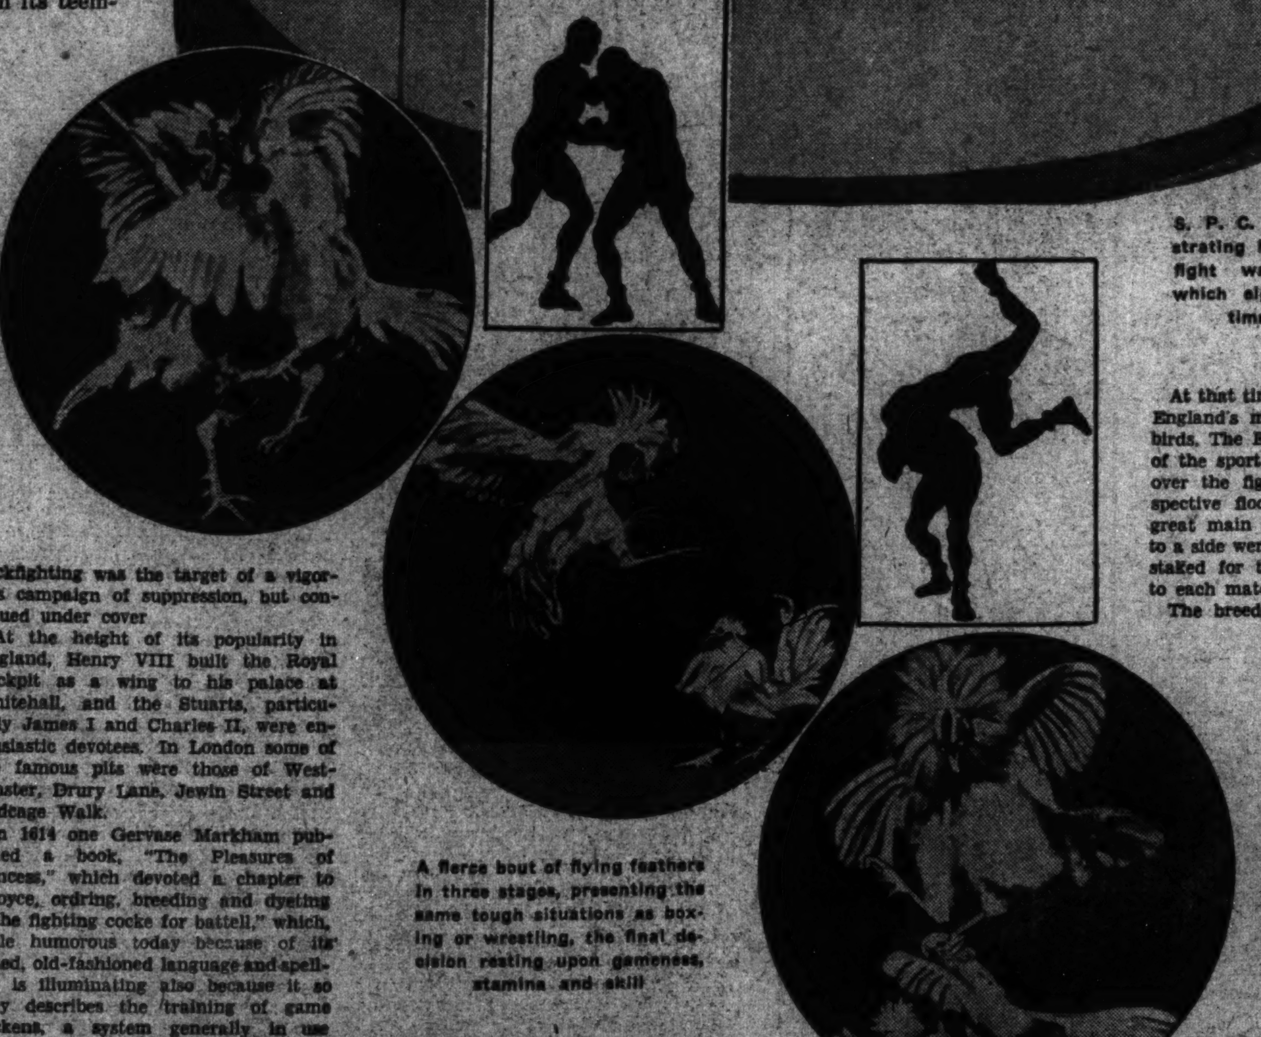
After a fight, said Markham, "If he be not killed, the first thing you doe, you shall search his wounds and as many as you can find, you shall with your mouth sucke the blood out of them, then wash them with salt water and so stove him up as hot as you can."

In old England there were three varieties of mains—battles between an agreed number of pairs of birds, the battle royal and the Welsh main, in which eight pairs were matched, then the eight winners and so on until a champion emerged.

FROM early days the pits have been virtually standard—circular in shape and about twenty feet across, surrounded by a barrier outside which sit the spectators. Since ancient times, too, rules of combat have been the same. The handler is permitted in the ring only long enough to "set" his rooster breast to breast with its opponent. Thereafter, he may not touch it except when it refuses to fight longer or its spurs become entangled. The birds then are set once more breast to breast, and if the one still refuses combat, he is declared defeated.

Persons who recall the recent visit to America of the seventeenth Earl of Derby, Lord Edward George Villiers Stanley, may be interested to learn that his grandfather, the fourteenth Earl, was a leading figure in one of the greatest gamecock mains ever staged in Great Britain.

S. P. C. A. officers demonstrating how a raided cockfight was staged during which eight feathered victims were killed



A fierce bout of flying feathers in three stages, presenting the same tough situations as boxing or wrestling, the final decision resting upon gameness, stamina and skill

At that time, 1830, Joseph Gilliver was England's most noted breeder of game birds. The Earl of Derby was a devotee of the sport, and rivalry and argument over the fighting prowess of their respective flocks developed. Finally, the great main was arranged. Seven birds to a side were entered, with 5000 guineas staked for the main and 1000 guineas to each match.

The breeds involved, many of which survive today, included the white pyle, Cheshire pyle, Irish brown-red, Lancashire, black-red and Staffordshire dun. History relates that Gilliver's birds were triumphant, winning five of the seven mathes.

Game fighting was prohibited by statute in Massachusetts six years after the Derby-Gilliver main and thirteen years later was made taboo in England. Today it is forbidden in virtually every State of the Union, as well as Canada. Despite these prohibitions, the business of matching game roosters continues to thrive.

Today the best fighting age of game birds is regarded between one and two years and favorite breeds include Irish Grays, Shawlnecks, Gordons, Eslin red quills, Baltimore Topknots, Dominiques, Warhorses and Claibornes.

ANY American who has soldiered in the Philippines recalls with amusement the intensity of the fad of gamecock fighting on Luzon and the lesser islands. There, a native considers his game chicken as important a part of his retinue as his wife. In Borneo, Sumatra and Java, the little brown man apparently values the fighting fowl above home, wife and children. He has frequently been known to wager wife and children on the result of a match in which his favorite gamecock was one of the principals.

He carries the bird with him wherever he goes, bearing it under one arm or in a basket with the nonchalance of a Broadway stroller with his walking stick. He holds some peculiar notions, too. One of these is that constant stroking of the chicken's feathers increases its strength and stamina. Another is that blowing the exhalation from his cigar or pipe into the bird's plumage adds to its courage.

The Filipino carries his rooster to church of a Sunday morning, tethering it by a peg and short length of cord outside the edifice, but taking care it is far enough distant from its nearest feathered neighbor that the two cannot become involved in a fight.

Immediately after church service, the Filipino men and their roosters retire to an adjacent wood and start the mains, which continue throughout the day, generally presided over by an ancient Chinese, who combines his managerial duties with those of bookmaker, for gambling on the result is the dominant factor over and above the small purses offered individual winners.

Filipinos are firmly convinced the rojo or Colorado gallo (red chicken) is the best fighter. Americans, when they wish to enter the lists against the natives, either as bettors or owners of birds, must perforce bank their hopes on the blanco gallo, white rooster, or the Negro gallo, black gamecock. Results indicate, too, that the native knows his chickens.

IN THE Far East, the feeding of gamecocks is deemed of prime importance. One of the most favored diet lists calls for the yolks of 200 eggs, mixed in a fixed proportion with musk, the highest grade saffron, sugar, almond kernels, ambergris, kernels of the edible pine and fine white wheat flour. The flour must first be fried in butter. Then the sugar is added, and after that all the other pounded ingredients.

A small meal of this compound is given the first day of training. With the mixture down, the bird is then fed wheat flour unmixed with butter in order that the grease may be washed from the cock's throat. Then the rooster is muzzled, so that it can neither pick up grit nor drink, but is permitted exercise. And so the diet continues until fight day.

ONE of the best-known breeders of game birds, perhaps, in America is Thomas Rogers Kimball, nationally known architect, of Omaha, Neb., who headed the committee which selected Bertram Goodhue's design for the new Nebraska State Capitol.

"The game rooster," says Kimball, "is the single example of sporting blood which has not suffered from man's interference. Cockfighting is incapable of being 'fixed.' The gamecock's gift, which he possesses to a degree above all other creatures, is gameness. If a bird hasn't it, he isn't gamecock. If he has it, nothing can rob him of it.

"Gamecocks are the one example of birds of a feather which do not flock together. They are such aggressive individualists that two of them on opposite sides of a knothole, with food in plenty by their sides, would starve to death watching each other."

Kimball smiles good-naturedly when the discussion turns to the efforts to have the sport of cockfighting stamped out. He goes on serenely breeding his feathered little gladiators, seeing in them "the qualities of courage, stamina, singleness of purpose and determination which, if they could be inoculated into human kind, would make them the greatest boxers, wrestlers, golfers, track and football stars the world has known."

"You can't help but admire a gamecock," smiles Kimball. "He possesses so many admirable qualities we humans view as ideal."

GEORGE WASHINGTON the EDUCATOR

> KNOWLEDGE is, in every country, the surest basis of public happiness. To the security of a free constitution it contributes by convincing those who are intrusted with the public administration that every valuable end of government is best answered by the enlightened confidence of the people; and by teaching the people themselves to know and value their own rights . . . and to discriminate the spirit of liberty from that of licentiousness.

Washington and Lee University, Lexington, Va., named in honor of the Father of His Country and General Robert E. Lee, who was the institution's first president

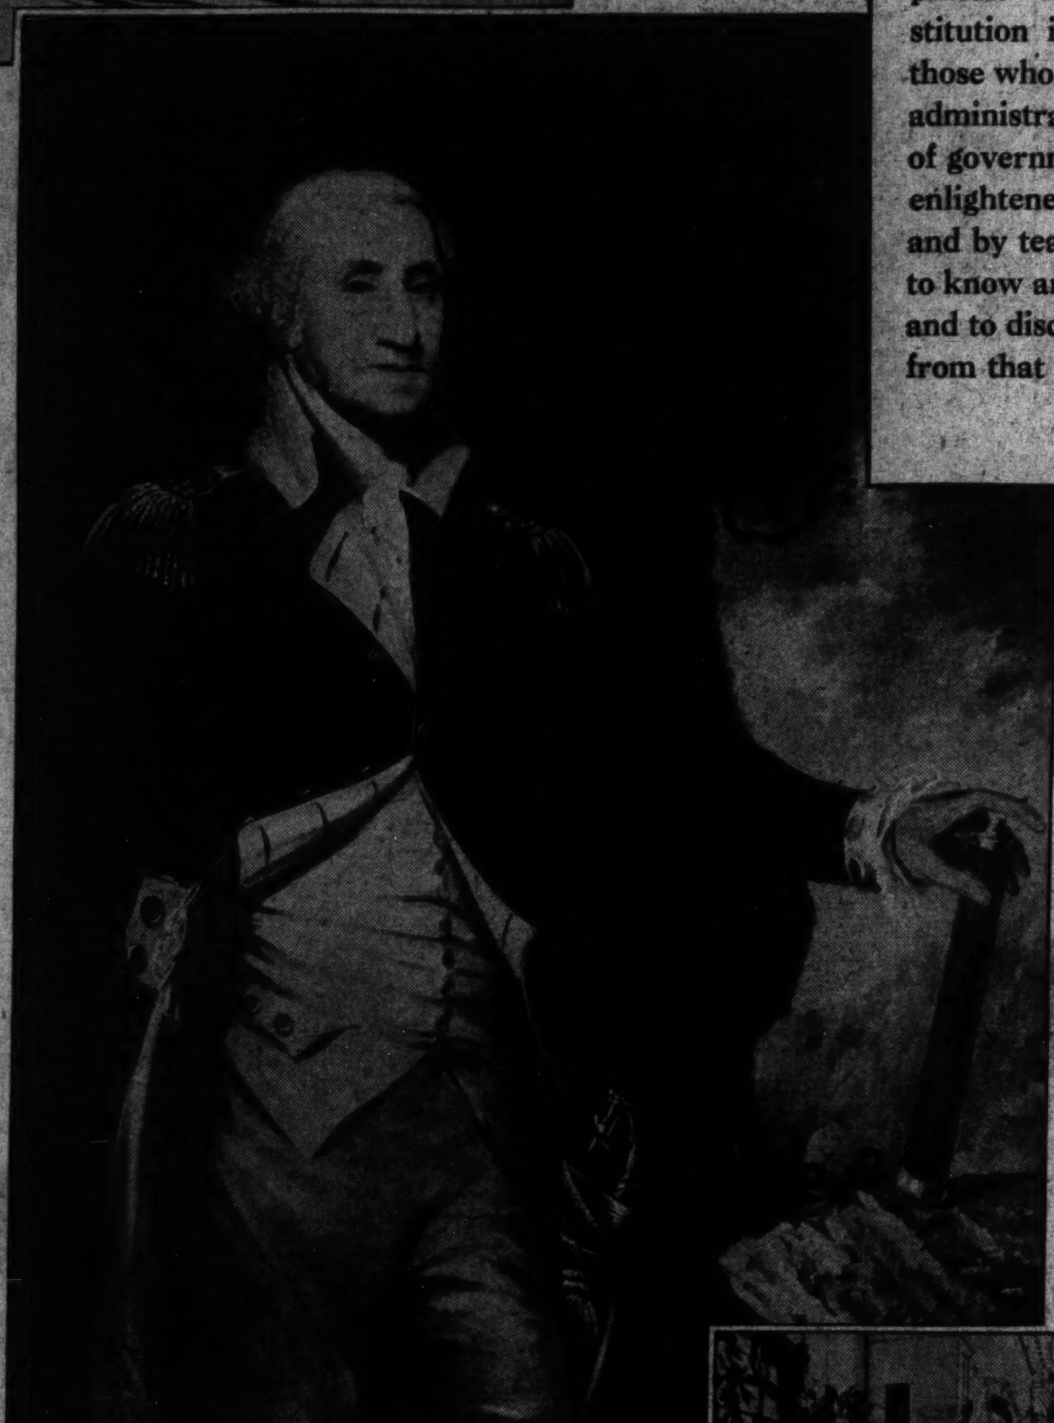
First President Made Possible Two of America's Outstanding Universities by His Financial Assistance

By Julia Goode Eagan

DURING the George Washington Bicentennial Celebration, which has just passed into history, almost every phase of the life of the Father of His Country has been emphasized with varying degrees of elaborateness and detail—soldier, surveyor, planter, patriot, gentleman, statesman, son, husband, citizen and President!

But one phase, that of educator and patron of arts and letters, has been somewhat overshadowed by his remarkable attainments in other fields. Yet this phase is one of the most significant and far-reaching in his entire career, and it is timely to recall it to the world as another anniversary of his birth approaches.

George Washington's collected writings show him a thinker along educational lines far in advance of most of his contemporaries, but his interest in education was by no means confined to theory alone. Washington donated generously to Transylvania College and other educational institutions, subscribed £50 annually for the instruction of poor children of Alexandria, while Washington and Lee University, in Virginia, and George Washington University, in the City of Washington, have the distinction of having been actually endowed by America's first President.



Portrait of George Washington which was painted from life by Gilbert Stuart in 1795

THE American Revolution ended with Washington's proclamation of peace in 1783, on the eighth anniversary of Paul Revere's famous ride, and men and officers returned to their homes "without a farthing in their pockets." Final articles of peace were signed and at length the last British regulars in America sailed out of New York Harbor. In the long hall of Fraunces' Tavern, Washington bade his officers an affectionate farewell and turned his face toward Mount Vernon. He hoped that his active military career was over, and he looked forward to life on his beautiful estate overlooking the broad Potomac.

Here he could spend his days in restfulness and peace, enjoy the ease of a prosperous, cultured, country gentleman, and devote himself particularly to his favored pastime, agriculture. Mount Vernon needed him, and he needed Mount Vernon.

Two years after his return home and retirement to private life, the Legislature of Virginia, in recognition of his services during the Revolution, presented him with a gift of 100 shares in the James River Canal Company and fifty shares in the Potomac River Canal Company. This expression of Virginia's esteem and pride in him touched him deeply, but it placed him in somewhat of a quandary.

He felt a delicacy in accepting so valuable and important a gift for his own personal emolument; and his appreciation made him feel an even greater delicacy in declining so beautiful an expression of the Legislature's gratitude and devotion to him. He determined to accept it, but to accept it with reservations.

His friends made many and varied suggestions. General Knox proposed that General Washington accept the gift, and use the proceeds for the benefit of the widows and children of Virginia officers killed in the Revolution—in other words, establish a special pension.

The idea of helping the dependent wives and children of his faithful officers who had sacrificed for the Colonies greatly appealed to Washington. But he believed it would be a more constructive and lasting aid to them should he put the money into a common cause. More definitely, he favored offering the tolls or dividends arising from these shares for the establishment of two schools, to benefit particularly the children of those men who had fallen in defense of the rights and liberties of America.

He planned that one of these schools should be located on the Potomac River and the other on the James. When the Legislature of Virginia learned his desires in the matter, it changed the act to permit him to apply the proceeds to any object "of a public nature, in such manner and under such distributions as the said George Washington by deed during his life, or by his last will and testament, shall direct." There the matter lay, quiescent, for the next decade.

WHEN Washington had been President for six years, the shares of the James River and Potomac River companies, which had been presented to him by the Legislature of Virginia, became productive. Some decision as to their bestowal and use now became imperative. Washington consulted the best minds of the time, and finally Thomas Jefferson, his Secretary of State, advanced the idea of giving all the stock for the establishment of a National University in the District of Columbia.

The District of Columbia had been fixed as the seat of the United States Government in 1790 by an act of Congress, and during these early years was in the process of building. The interest and pride of the country was focused upon it, and a part of President Washington's ideal for it included making it a great educational center such as in later years it has become. Mr. Jefferson's suggestion pleased the President. He decided at once to make a bequest of the fifty shares of Potomac stock to the proposed university to be erected in the Federal City. He felt constrained, however, to consult the Legislature of Virginia concerning the disposal of its gift to him, particularly concerning the James River stock.

IN REPLY, the Virginia Legislature commended the erection of a university in the capital city, and approved the endowment of it with the fifty shares of Potomac stock. It then requested that the President appropriate the 100 shares of James River stock "to a seminary in such place in the upper country as he may deem most convenient to a majority of the inhabitants thereof." The next step for President Washington to determine was which particular school or academy in the "upper country" should receive his endowment.

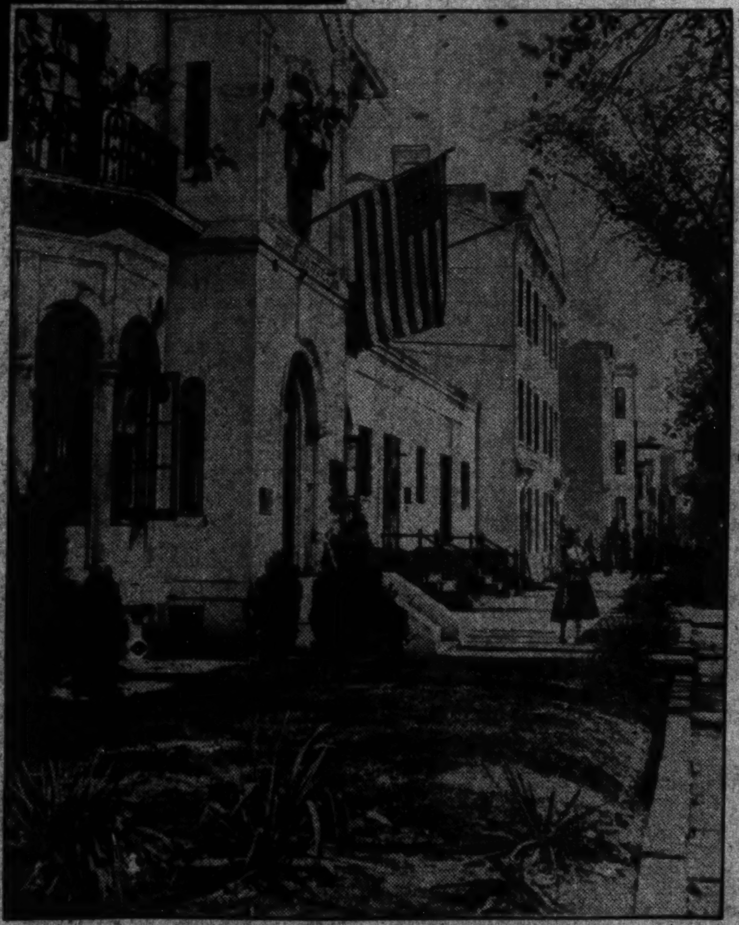
This "upper country," or Valley of Virginia, had been settled, for the most part, by Scotch-Irish Presbyterians. In the first decades of the eighteenth century thousands of these, sturdy Scotch people, who had colonized in Ireland, poured into America, entering chiefly by way of Philadelphia. They rapidly spread into the mountains of Pennsylvania and Maryland, and overflowed in great numbers into the Shenandoah Valley and beyond. With them to these rugged frontiers they brought a passionate devotion to religion and education, and this upper country was dotted not only with the rude homes of these settlers, but with their log meeting houses and log schoolhouses or academies as well.

Until three years before the death of George Washington, Virginia had no tax-supported free public schools. New England had taken the lead in this development, Maryland had followed in 1696, and Virginia, likewise, 100 years later. But even after the passage of these educational measures, little money was secured through public taxation. The Scotch-Irish Presbyterians stood for education, and in lieu of public schools and colleges, became famous in the period of what was known as "classical schools" and academies.

While President Washington was considering the matter of which school to choose as his beneficiary, he received a communication from the trustees of Liberty Hall Academy in Rockbridge County, Virginia. The letter commended the President's generosity, and presented the claims of Liberty Hall Academy to his attention and patronage.

Liberty Hall Academy, now known as Washington and Lee University, was one of the most famous institutions of learning in the Colonies. It had been established in Augusta County, Virginia, in 1749 as "Augusta Academy," called sometimes "Mount Pleasant Academy," and was a Southern companion of Yale, Harvard and Princeton. A few years later its name was changed to "Washington Academy." In point of time, it is fifth oldest of our American colleges.

In 1813 the title "Washington Academy" was changed to "Washington College" by act of Legislature; and in 1871, following the death of the institution's president, General Robert E. Lee, the name of Washington College was changed to its present corporate title of "Washington and Lee University."



George Washington University, Washington, D. C., the founding of which was made possible by our first President

YOU will recall that when President Washington deferred to the wishes of the Virginia Legislature in regard to the 100 shares of James River stock, the Legislature indorsed his plan of bequeathing the fifty shares of Potomac stock for the establishment of a national university in the Federal city. After the death of Washington in 1799, his will was found to contain the promised bequest for the establishment of the university in the City of Washington "to which the youth of fortune and talents from all parts thereof might be sent for the completion of their Education in all branches of polite literature; in arts and sciences; in acquiring knowledge in the principles of Politics and Good Government."

It was not until 1821 that the founding of the proposed national university was undertaken, and by that time, unfortunately, the Potomac River Company had failed, and the stock endowment had become entirely valueless. At the time of Washington's bequest, the par value per share had been $444, or some $22,200.

In 1819 the Rev. Luther Rice, a Baptist missionary, had formed an association to buy land for the use of a college in Washington City. Since the funds which the President had provided had become worthless, a number of his friends, inspired by his spirit, decided to co-operate with their means and influence.

ACCORDINGLY, and thinking ever of Washington's example in what he believed to be a substantial gift to this cause, John Quincy Adams, Secretary of State; William H. Crawford, Secretary of the Treasury; John C. Calhoun, Secretary of War; William Wirt, Attorney General, and Return J. Meigs, Postmaster General, became patrons of the new college, and, together with thirty-two members of Congress, contributed to a fund raised for the purchase of the land and development of the work. Thus, while Washington's gift was materially disappointing, it was nevertheless the means of bringing to pass this project which he held so dear.

In addition to these two specific endowments, President Washington made suggestions relating to grants in aid which became the fixed policy of the Government by the enactment, in 1862, of the Morrill act granting lands, and by the extension, in 1890, of this act to include funds as well.

George Washington's great gift to education was his birthday gift to the Nation, and George Washington University in Washington, and Washington and Lee University in Virginia, tangibly immortalize the vision which the Father of His Country had of an enduring and enlightened democracy.

"SCRAP-IRON PICADOR" Rides on to FAME

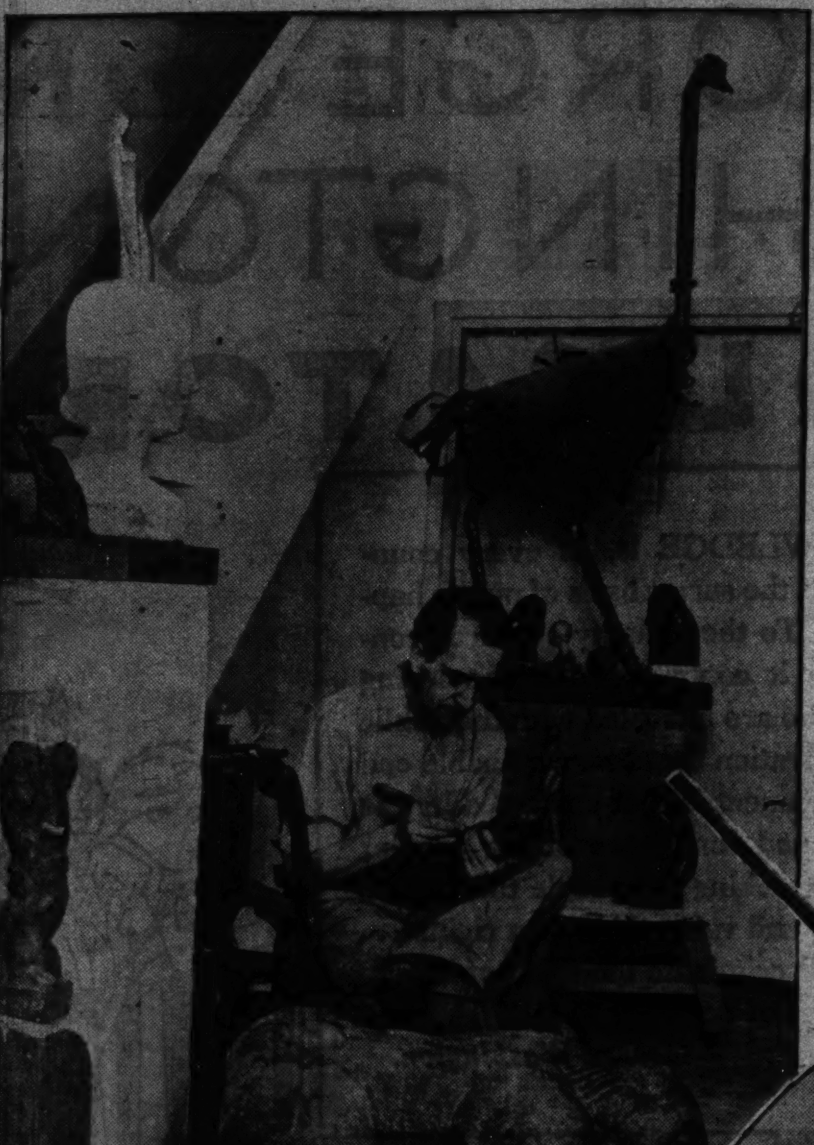
Spanish Sculptor's "Wisecracks" at Art Win Him More Attention and Comment Than Do His Serious Works—Pokes Fun at Contemporaries



Jose de Creeft in his Paris studio with some examples of his artistic humor, including his "autriche," which has created wide comment

ART should have its light moments. An artist is entitled to his little jest—"la bonne blague"—as well as any other person. This relieves the monotony of prolonged serious work, adds a bit of paprika to the sometimes flavorless pudding of life, gives an outlet for one's humorous fancy, provides a tonic laugh for one's friends.

Since Jose de Creeft, modern Spanish artist, who recently held an exhibition of his work in New York City, is of this belief, he perpetrated the scrap - iron "El Picador," a decidedly "bonne blague," an amusing and bizarre figure, which De Creeft constructed out of lengths of stovepipe, old gasoline cans and tar tins, coal shovels, inner tubes, rusty iron, soup ladles and old wire. It is a life-size figure of a man on horseback, and De Creeft spent entranced hours in the cellar of his Paris studio constructing the funny, and at the same time sorry, figure.

An old gasoline can is the body of the horse, the cover serves as the picador's hat. The legs of both beast and man are made of rusty old stovepipe lengths, a dented coal scuttle is the horse's head, an old shovel, reversed, forms the spurred foot of the rider. The man's body is constructed of rusty pieces of old iron, his arms are stovepipes, his shoulders are discarded soup ladles, his hair a tea strainer, while the horse's mane is made of steel wool, his tail of strips of pliable tin. The picador's long lance is an old broom handle.

"YOU think he is amusing, yes, but he is also 'muy triste'—very sad," said the Spanish sculptor, patting the tin sides of the horse, while his 7-month-old son, Pepe, or "Billy," as he is called, in the arms of the interviewer, crowed with delight at the grotesque rider. Oddly enough, the piece of work which De Creeft created in an idle hour for his own amusement and that of his friends dominated his exhibition of modern sculpture in one of the galleries of the New School for Social Research.

There is a bit of irony in the fact that the sorry specimen which the Spanish sculptor constructed as a favor to his friends, to serve as a decoration of the hall in which a dance was held in the Spanish colony in Paris should have caused such a sensation. Nothing else De Creeft has done has brought him as much publicity—columns of write-ups and photographs in the European newspapers and magazines, to say nothing of American publications. Legends came into being, in which "El Picador" became a "Don Quixote," a sort of living embodiment of ironic intent.

De Creeft was even suspected of poking fun at pure "abstract" sculpture. While he has a predilection for forms reminiscent of nature, he does not carry abstractiness to excess. So the enthusiasts of pure "abstract" sculpture in Paris thought he was satirizing them with this crazy "Picador." But actually, as De Creeft, who speaks nothing but Spanish and French, declares, it was done for a joke to provide laughter for his Spanish friends at the dance.

"All Spaniards are familiar with picadors," explained De Creeft, a slender, olive-skinned, dark-eyed man in his 40s, who is filled with the verve of living, who has a strain of gentle irony in his make-up and sees quickly the combination of the humorous-and-sorry in life.

"My picador was a 'burla'—a "blague' —what you call a 'joke' in English," said De Creeft, twitching the wire tail of the old tin nag. "Spaniards are all familiar with the pompous figure of the picador at the bullfight, where he carries himself proudly, triumphantly, victoriously, although he is invariably mounted on the sorriest of old nags. At the Spanish ball, my Picador was a huge success, and so many of my friends insisted that I exhibit him at the Salon des Independants in Paris, and he was sent there. Now he follows me about at all my exhibitions and has become a sort of 'white elephant.'

"BUT I like him, nevertheless. He is such a ridiculous fellow, mounted on his sad-looking horse. The pair both epitomize the cruelty and tragedy of bullfighting. The sad old horses, blindfolded, die on their feet, while the picadors, whose business it is to irritate the bulls with their lances or darts, pose as men of great courage, like brave generals off to battle. So much braggadocio, so much posturing and strutting, when the poor animals beneath them are breathing their last. But there is nobility in suffering—it strengthens character—and so I like this half-funny, half-tragic figure."

While De Creeft terms "El Picador" a jest "par accidente," he has perpetrated some good "blagues" intentionally. There was, for example, the ostrich. Also the sardine. And ever "Maternitie."

"It is refreshing to give full rein to fancy," said De Creeft. "We all take life too seriously. It should be looked upon as a gay adventure much of the time. If an artist has a whimsical turn of mind he should be permitted to execute some little drolleries for his own amusement, if he so chooses. After all, he is putting in his own time on them. That is the trouble with so many artists, particularly in this country. They permit their talent to be manipulated like soft clay by others. Every bit of it must be commercialized, must bring in monetary returns. It results in standardization, the death of genuine creative talent, originality, individuality.

"'Conform! Conform!' the executioners cry. But I insist that the artist should have complete freedom in his work. If he wants to fashion unsalable wares occasionally, what of it? The loss—and also the pleasure derived from this expenditure of time—are both his. If the artist has utter freedom he is happy, does not take himself too seriously, is able to find time to put over a little creative fun once in a while."

The "Sardine in the Lamp Chimney" was a bit of De Creeft's fun, also, between jobs of beautifully sculptured pieces, which he does in granite, marble, wood, ivory, ebony, bronze, terra cotta, lead, plaster — for the Spanish artist, possessed of much versatility and gusto—alternates between his "blagues" and his serious work.

"Yes, I will confess that the 'Sardine' was genuine satire," admitted De Creeft, who said that he wanted to satirize modernistic sculptors, particularly one European sculptor who had the trick, or artistic conceit, of rubbing his pieces in oil. You touched them and had to run for a towel. Well, his own sardine called for a regular scrubbing brush after the lampblack, De Creeft declared in a burst of mirth.

"I made a very nice carved sardine out of granite and suspended it in a lamp chimney half full of oil," said De Creeft, describing this masterpiece of sarcasm. "The sardine hung over a plate full of tiny shot, representing caviar, and it was garnished with a slice of lemon. I called it 'Nature morte'—dead nature—but the critics raged and the public stood around gazing at my harmless sardine with their mouths agape. They did not know whether to take my sardine seriously, be annoyed at it or touch it and get their hands all black. I? Well, I stood on the sidelines convulsed with laughter at the perplexity of the onlookers. I enjoyed it. I got quite a few laughs out of the whole performance and went back to my serious work refreshed by the experience. It was like going to a comedy in which I played all roles."

Mrs. de Creeft, now holding little Pepe, who was playing gleefully with her strand of red beads, reminded her husband of another "blague," the "Autriche." The ostrich was also made of scraps of wire and tin and stovepipe ends, a strutting monstrosity. Senor de Creeft made this, like the picador, in order to amuse his friends and himself, but decided to send it, also, to the Salon des Independants. The president of the salon protested, and relegated the trick ostrich to a back stairway, where an architect, who conducted a restaurant in connection with the salon, stumbled across it, salvaged it and set it up in his dining room.

THE architect - restaurateur even changed the name of the place to fit his find and called it "Restaurant de l'Autriche," placing the stovepipe bird, as on a throne, in the center of the big room. There it reigned, and in its shadow sat the officials of the salon, including the president, who had banished it from its first place of honor. He was obliged to overhear, as he sat dining, De Creeft's twit:

"But, my dear Mr. President, I observe that you are eating very heartily despite l'autriche."

Senor de Creeft, who was born in Guadalajara, Spain, but who has had a studio in Paris for many years, works in direct carving, from the stone and wood, and likes primitive art. He stresses the importance of form and line and rhythm. His sculptured pieces, done in satiny smooth woods and stone, are unique in conception. There is, for example, "The Sisters," a tall, slender sculptured statue done in olivewood so satiny in appearance that the onlooker is seized with the compulsion to touch it, to feel the glistening wood.

"And here is another poet." De Creeft pointed to a head carved from wood that somehow reminded the onlooker of a question mark and at the same time of the head of Abraham Lincoln.

"It is Cesare Vallejo, the Peruvian poet," explained De Creeft, "done in modernistic fashion. It was a joy doing this piece, for Vallejo had an Indian type of profile like, say, the Aztec—straight, strong, rugged."

There were a number of striking gargoyles in the exhibition, crouching peasants done in gray granite.

A plaque, copy of De Creeft's "Monument to the Dead Soldiers," is a curious intermingling of faces, sometimes two faces carved from the same piece of wood; mother and soldier-son, wife and sister. In one corner is an arabesque representing the soldier's salute.

De Creeft deplores the American urge for speed and standardization in art.

He said: "Millions are spent for a building, a skyscraper, but only a few dollars for the sculptured bits one finds here and there on the edifice.

"No great art comes into being in haste, the handiwork of the beginner. Long years of practice precede good workmanship, and that holds good in any craft. This impatience, this speed, this desire on the part of novices for recognition without preparation is sometimes a bugbear to me when I observe it in the beginner student, the one who has not even commenced to live or to achieve anything worth mentioning.

"But we will not grow too serious, even about this phase of art, will we?" observed the Spanish artist, smothering a sigh. He addressed his small son, getting restless, even in his exuberance at being in a new setting, because it was nearing his feeding time:

"See, Billy, 'El Picador' is growing impatient. He wants to get out of the bull-ring," and the artist pulled the melancholy nag's mane, rattled his scrap-iron ears. Billy gurgled with delight, laughed aloud, appeared to forget his pangs of hunger.

"Yes," said De Creeft, "it is good to have a tonic laugh now and then. What matter how one achieves it, either through an amusing show, a well-told joke, a sooty old sardine or a scrap-iron picador?"

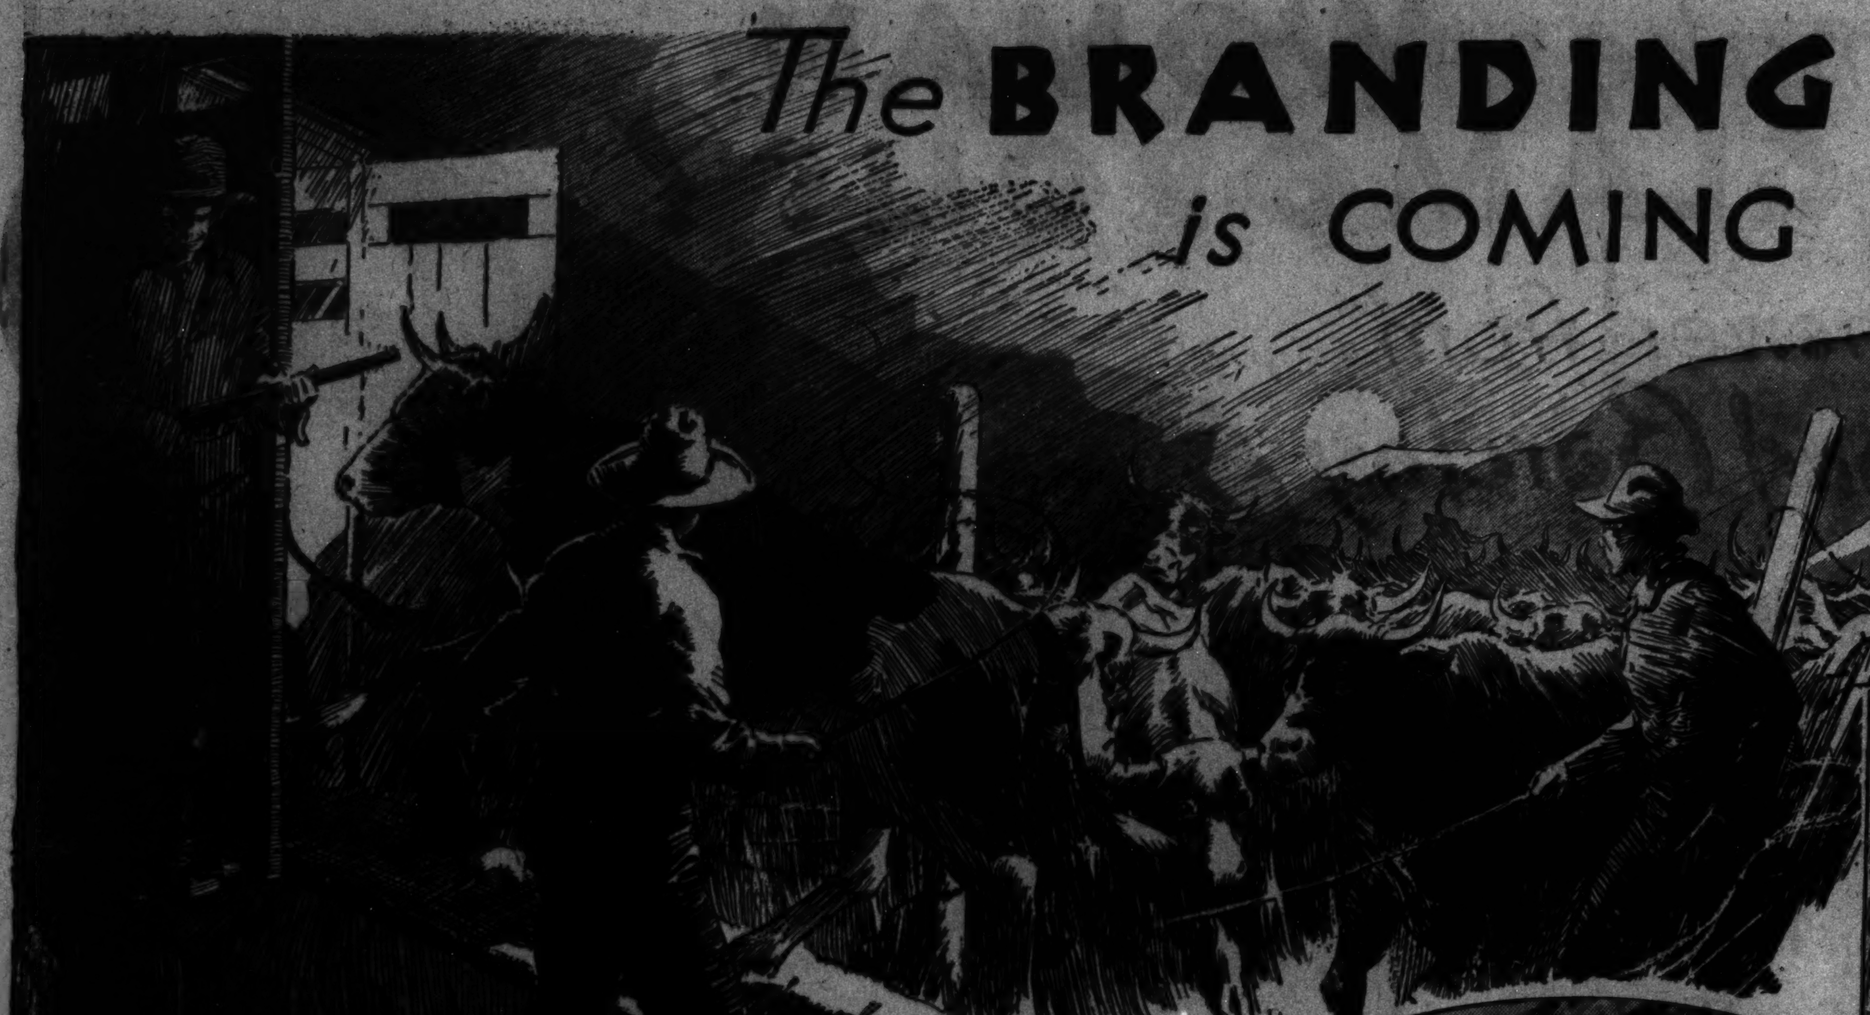
The BRANDING IRON is COMING BACK

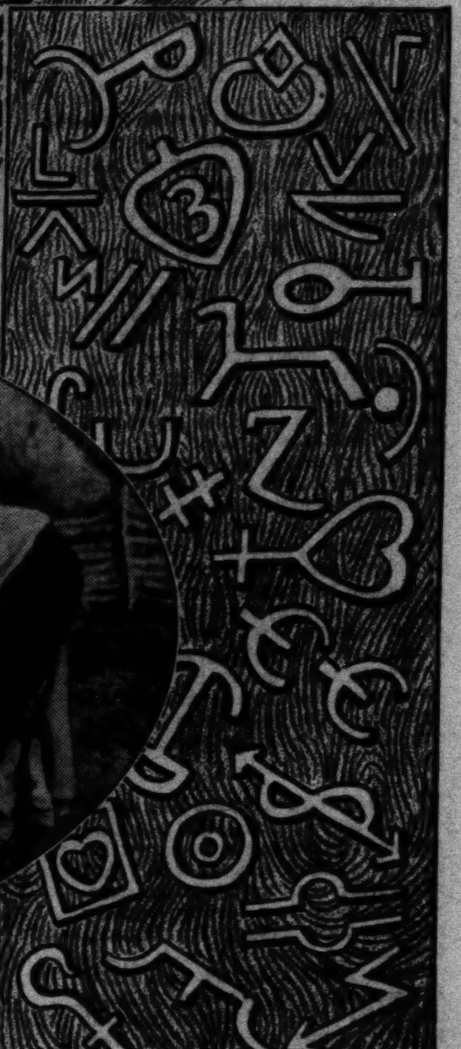


New Type of Cattle Rustler Causes Ranch Owners to Resort to Old-Time Method of Marking Their Stock

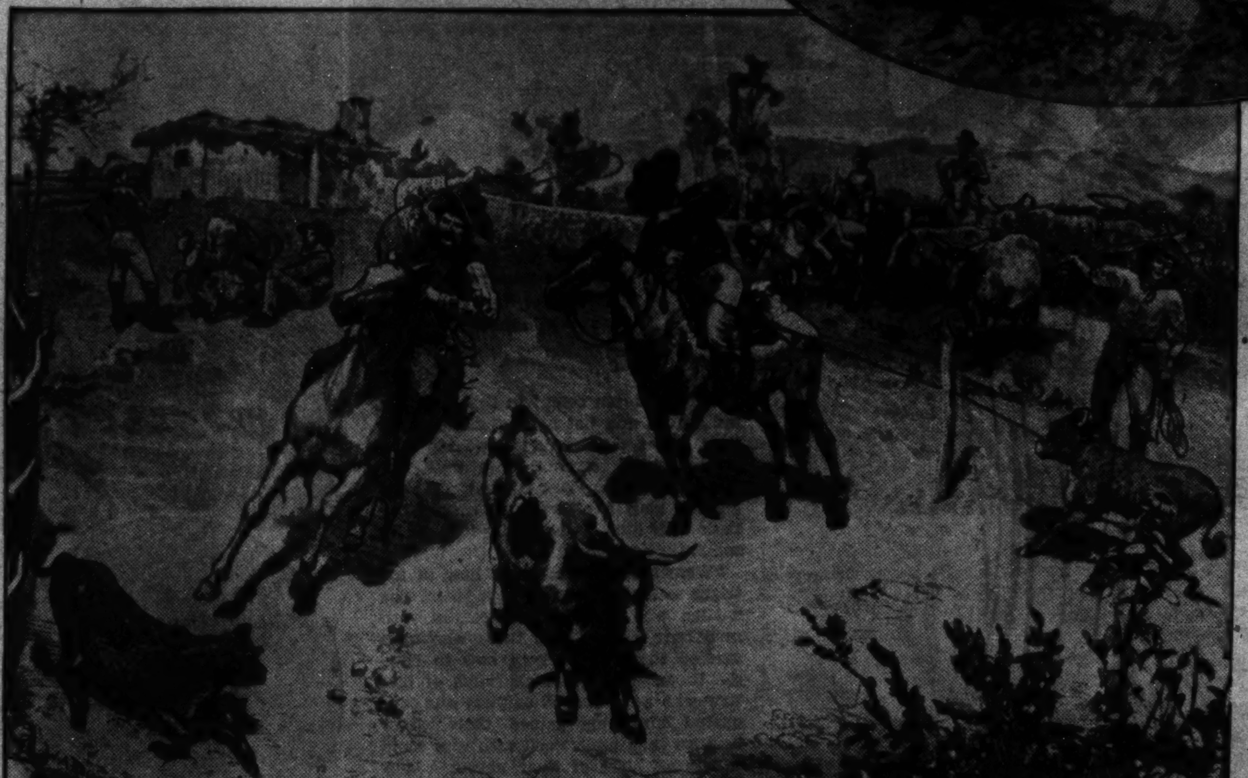
By Hal Borland

The modern motorized cattle thief works quickly, taking but a few moments to load up with unbranded steers, which often are sold before the real owner discovers his loss

Not always a pleasant task in the routine of a cowpuncher's life is the branding of an unusually tough customer after a round-up



Some interesting designs which must be submitted to branding inspectors by cattle owners and approved to avoid duplication



The more skillful a cowboy in handling a rope, the greater his reward in capturing cattle, as shown in this scene of the West fifty years ago when branding inspectors were unknown

THE Western cattle country is "going native" once more; this time on official recommendation. The branding iron is coming back. The Colorado Board of Brand Inspectors led the way when its members declared that a return to branding of livestock was the best way to put an end to modern cattle theft, and urged cattlemen in that State to heat up the branding irons that have hung rusting in the barns all these years and put them to work. Brand inspectors in Wyoming and New Mexico are co-operating in the movement and other Western States are indicating that they, too, will take a hand in the campaign to save the stockman's meager profits from the modern "rustler."

Cattle "rustling" as it is known to the two-gun Western fiction readers has been a thing of the past for several decades. Time was when any ambitious cowboy with a calloused conscience and a deft hand with a rope and an iron pothook could set himself up in business between suns and soon be "owner" of a sizable herd of steers. That was in the days before the homesteader, barbed wire fence and brand inspectors. It was in the days when the Prairie Cattle Company controlled close to 8,000,000 acres of grazing land in Colorado, New Mexico, Oklahoma and Texas and ran on that range some 150,000 head of cattle every year. Cattle theft in those days was on a wholesale scale, with anywhere from 100 to 1000 head of prime steers vanishing from a remote range overnight, and with ranchmen planning their herds with a definite "writeoff" for losses to the thieves.

THOSE days vanished years ago; and even before the homesteader invaded the big ranges that type of cattle thief had been pretty well weeded out. But now the modern cousin of that old school of "rustlers" has been inspired by the depression and the large number of unbranded beef cattle.

Now the modern cattle thief climbs into a very modern autotruck along about sundown, drives perhaps fifty miles over good roads, chooses a fenced pasture to his liking, snips the wires, drives in, lowers the endgate of his truck and loads it up with from three to ten prime beef steers—unbranded steers, mind you.

Then he gets back behind the steering wheel, steps on the gas and by sun-up is 100 miles away. There he sells his haul of beef, leaving no telltale evidence except a bill of sale signed with a nom de convenience. And like as not, he is halfway home before the man who bred and raised those steers realizes that they have been stolen.

The motorized cattle thief has been doing big business these last few years. In Dakota he became so audacious that the cattlemen banded together as vigilantes to put an end to the wholesale theft, and even then they were not wholly successful. The raids have even extended into the East, Ohio and Pennsylvania dairy farmers losing some of their choice butter-fat producers in just this way. But until the Colorado Brand Inspectors advised the old remedy, the branding iron, nobody seemed to know how to put the cattle "rustler" who travels on pneumatic tires out of business.

BRANDING has been the accepted means of identifying livestock for nobody knows how many generations. It is said to have originated in Eastern Europe or Asia in the forgotten ages when most men were herdsmen.

It has been in vogue in America since the advent of the Spaniards through Mexico. Horses and cattle have been branded in that country since 1545 or a little earlier, and some of the present-day brand marks have been in active use in the Southwest more than 200 years. The De Baca family's brand is a notable instance. That family traces its ancestry to the illustrious Spanish explorer, Cabeza de Vaca, or De Baca. Literally translated, that name means "head of a cow." So for generations the family has used as its brand a mark which represents a cow's head. When that brand was first used nobody knows, but certainly it was in existence early in the eighteenth century. It is still in use and recorded in the New Mexico State brand book.

Branding is, in essence, the searing of an identifying mark on the skin of a cow, a horse, a mule or a pig. It is done with an iron shaped in the form of the brand. This iron is heated in a fire to the proper temperature, the animal to be branded is either held in a chute or thrown on the ground and held or tied. The hot iron is applied to the skin, in the case of cattle to the shoulder, the ribs or the hip. If it is the proper temperature it scarcely more than touches the skin. But when it is removed it has left a skin burn which, while momentarily painful, heals quickly and leaves only a welt along its outlines.

In the days of open range, all cattle were branded as calves, usually when from 2 to 4 months old. Branding was necessary to identify cattle which roamed from a dozen herds into the same range. It was done on the spring round-up, when cowboys from half a dozen ranches using the same general district as feeding grounds went out together and "worked" all the cattle on that range. That is, they gathered all the cattle in successive bunches, separated them according to brands and marked all calves according to the brands their mothers bore.

It was a recognition of the matriarchal system in the cattle world, and it was done in the spring, not long after the calves were born, to make sure they would still be following their mothers. On the fall round-up, when beef for market was chosen from the herds, any calves that had escaped branding in the spring round-up were taken care of. Thus, virtually every head of cattle on the range was marked with the hot iron as a matter of course.

THE cattle thief's methods, in those days, were such as took advantage of this rather casual system of marking. If he chose to accumulate calves, he beat the cowboys to them in the spring and had them all branded up before the early round-up. Of course, this method involved considerable work, for the thief had to drive both calves and mothers to some hidden haven, there brand the calves with his own mark, keep them all feeding in some hidden valley until the calves were ready to wean and then send the cows back to their original range.

It was easier to take advantage of the spring round-up's oversight and follow along a few weeks later, pick out calves that had not yet been branded and then mark them with his own symbol.

But if the "rustler" really meant business and went in for quick returns, he stole grown steers, altered their brands into something else, let the alterations heal, and then drove them off to market.

It was this last type of cattle thief who caused the ranchmen of the past most of their worry, and it was largely to fight him and his confederates that the various boards of brand inspectors were organized. Careful work on the round-up could minimize the number of calves lost to the thieves. But the man who was bold enough and clever enough to "run" the brand on a grown steer was a tough customer to handle.

And a revival of branding will revive this same problem for the cattleman of today. It is just as easy to steal a branded steer in a truck as to steal an unbranded one. The branded steer, moreover, can be taken to the home ranch of the modern "rustler," there have his brand worked over, and remain there until it heals. Then the steer can be marketed along with the "rustler's" legitimately owned stock.

The one bright spot in this respect is that the old masters of the "running iron" are gone, and today's ranchmen do not believe new ones can be developed overnight. But there are ways to thwart even the master of that trick.

The first way, of course, is in the choice of a brand. Brands are not chosen arbitrarily. They are suggested by the man who wishes to register his mark. Then they are checked against the record by the brand board. If they duplicate a brand already registered, of course they are rejected. If they are too complicated to be easily read when placed on the side of an animal, they are rejected. Brand inspectors must have brands easy to memorize and watch. And if they are too readily changed into something else they are rejected.

A GREAT deal of ingenuity went into the brands of the past. Colonel Charles Goodnight, one of the first cattle barons of Texas, used a mark called "connected J A" and appearing with one side of the A connected with the J. That was all right until some enterprising "rustler" registered a brand he called "connected D A," which was a reversed D drawn on the left side of a capital A. After that Colonel Goodnight's cattle began to disappear and the DA gentleman's herd increased rapidly. By adding one curved line, it was possible to make the JA into a very neat DA.

Still others succeeded in choosing brands for themselves that were so original or so distinctive that they could scarcely be altered. Frank Star, for instance, seared a plain, five-pointed star on the ribs of his cattle, and the rustler who could pervert that mark was more than a master.

SOME of the old-time inspectors knew by memory the brands of every stockman in half a dozen States, and all of them knew the easiest alterations of all those marks. A cow-critter appearing at the Denver stockyards, with a Pitchfork Brand, for instance, would pass unchallenged if the brand looked good. Not only to the casual eye, but to the inspector's practiced eye. If it looked "phony," that cow-critter would be set aside for closer inspection. If there was a sizable number of doubtfully branded cattle, the man selling them might be detained until the matter was cleared up. If there was any question about his own pedigree, still further examination was in order.

And the final proof could generally be had in a few minutes. The bearer of a questioned brand was killed and skinned. The hide was examined on the inside. There would be found an indelible trace of the brand with which that steer was marked as a calf. Alterations of that brand revealed themselves as alterations once the inside of the skin was available for examination. And testimony to that effect, given by a veteran inspector, would stand up in court.

That is the principal reason the cattlemen are reviving the branding fires and combing the country for men who can handle a lasso and horses that know the routine of branding work. The mark seared on a calf's hip is put there to stay. It may be fantastically changed by an artistic "rustler," and the calf may grow up and be forgotten by its original owner. But the brand inspector who watches the livestock in the purchase pens will find out.

If the modern "rustlers" who travel on pneumatic tires instead of tireless steeds have any doubt about it, they will soon be learning differently. You can't fool the brand inspector.

What makes WOMAN GLAMOROUS?

An answer from McClelland Barclay

Mystery, Smoldering Silence, Inscrutability and Her Subtlety, Combined With Charm and Intelligence, Are Predominant Traits, Says Noted Artist

In an Interview With

Lillian G. Genn

Helene Barclay strikes an unusual pose for her husband, who for many years portrayed her type before he ever met her

WHAT is it that makes a woman glamorous? What sets her apart from the multitude like some radiant star, while other women look uninteresting and nondescript?

Every woman would like to know.

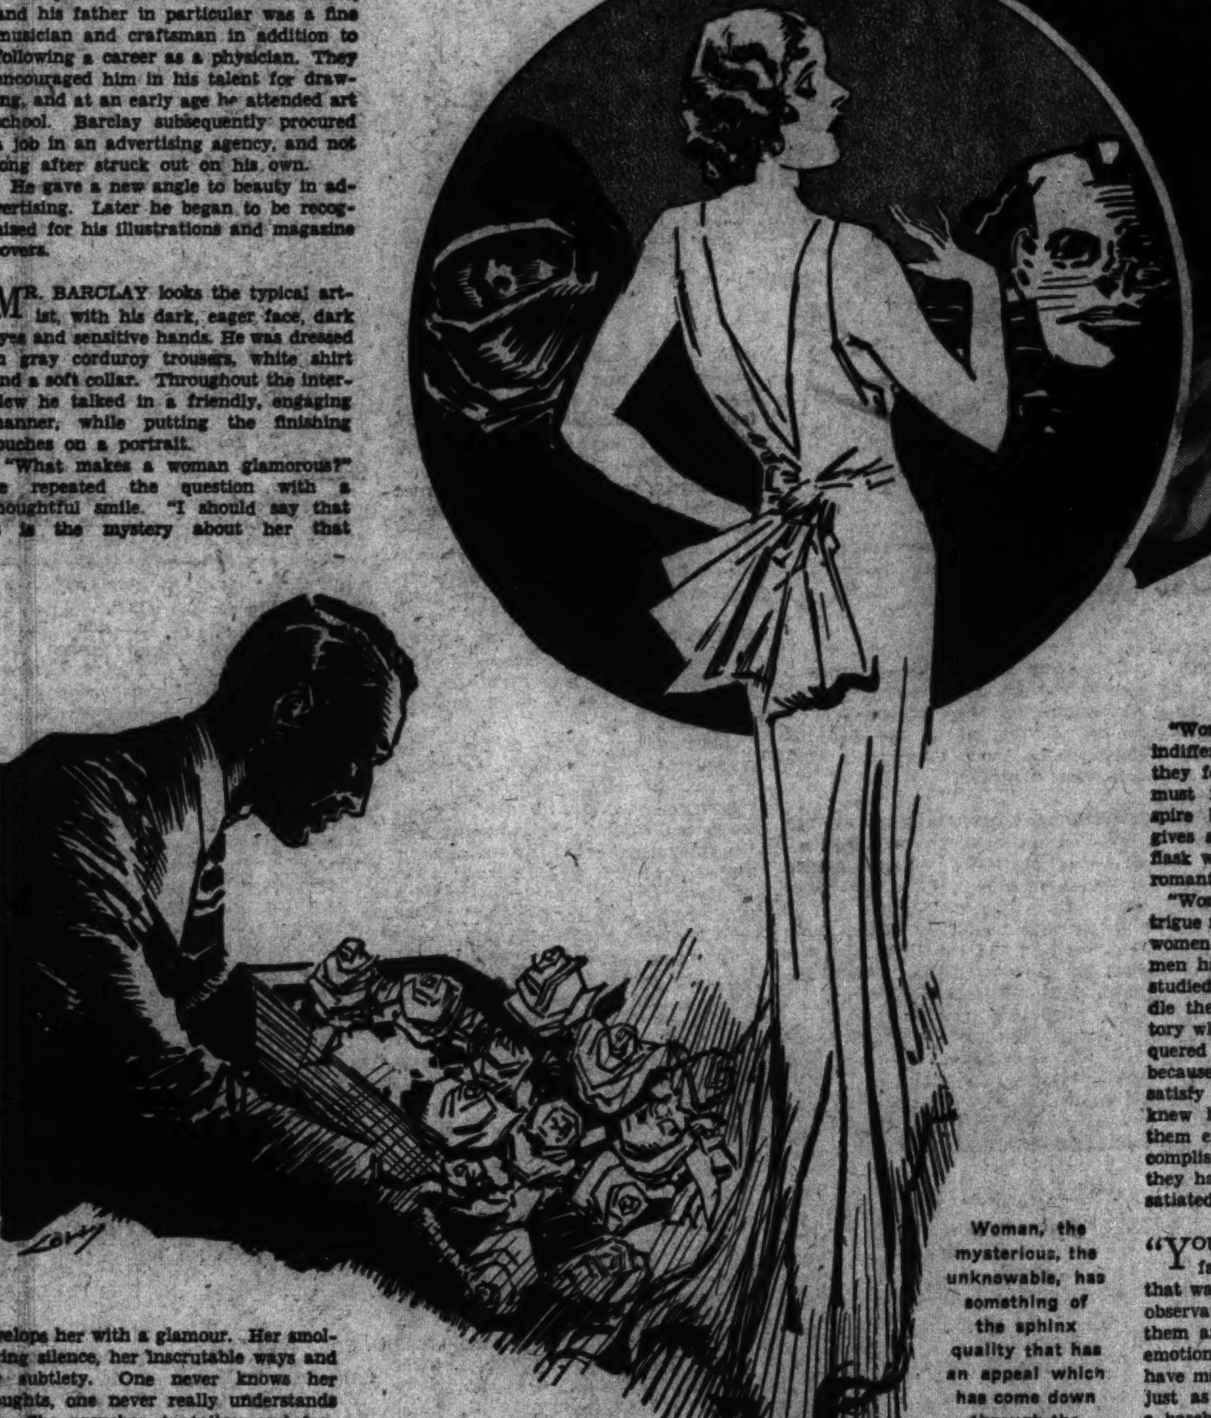
McClelland Barclay, who is famed for his illustrations and paintings and who in recent years has also done some interesting work in sculpture, was approached for his ideas on the subject. Hundreds of lovely women have posed for him, women who are unknown and women who are famous, and he has, therefore, had an unusual opportunity to study and know them.

Mr. Barclay's love of beauty and art comes to him as a natural heritage. Both of his parents were talented in the arts, and his father in particular was a fine musician and craftsman in addition to following a career as a physician. They encouraged him in his talent for drawing, and at an early age he attended art school. Barclay subsequently procured a job in an advertising agency, and not long after struck out on his own.

He gave a new angle to beauty in advertising. Later he began to be recognized for his illustrations and magazine covers.

MR. BARCLAY looks the typical artist, with his dark, eager face, dark eyes and sensitive hands. He was dressed in gray corduroy trousers, white shirt and a soft collar. Throughout the interview he talked in a friendly, engaging manner, while putting the finishing touches on a portrait.

"What makes a woman glamorous?" he repeated the question with a thoughtful smile. "I should say that it is the mystery about her that envelops her with a glamour. Her smoldering silence, her inscrutable ways and her subtlety. One never knows her thoughts, one never really understands her. She provokes, tantalizes and fascinates with every action, every move of her body and every glance of her eyes. Because one is never able to tear down the exquisite veil that surrounds her, she creates a pseudo-world of mysticism. And such a woman is glamorous to us.



Woman, the mysterious, the unknowable, has something of the sphinx quality that has an appeal which has come down through the ages, says McClelland Barclay

"Sometimes a woman naturally has the qualities that make her glamorous and sometimes she develops them. I think that in Greta Garbo's case she created it accidentally. She was betrayed by people whom she thought were her friends. She cultivated aloofness. She became harder than ever to know. Few people can now penetrate the depths of her heart. She has something of the sphinx quality—and that has an appeal which has come down through the ages. It is the very personification of Woman, the Mysterious, the Unknowable.

"Joan Crawford is glamorous to many people. She was not thought so when she first started her career. But she built herself up into something different. Her clothes, her manner, the expression on her face, everything about her proclaims feminine allure and glamour. She wears that invisible halo of charm which suggests that no man could ever be certain of her.

"Katharine Cornell, on the other hand, naturally possesses the qualities that make her glamorous even off the stage. The moment you see her, you sense something elusive about her. Her movements are quiet but fascinating, and although she hasn't great beauty, she has a distinctive, arresting air.

"Sometimes a woman is lovely to such a degree that she almost seems glamorous. Lillian Gish is that type. She is a wistful, gentle, flower-like creature that makes one think of twilight and lavender and sweet strains of music. The loveliness and femininity of Mary Pickford, and the quiet, spiritual air about her, also give an illusion of glamour.

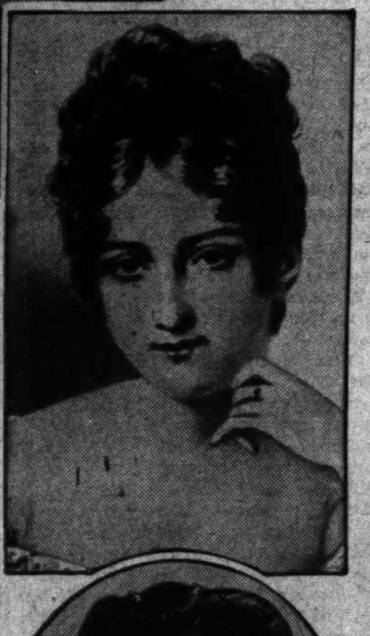
"Men are very much drawn to the woman who has glamour. She arouses man's imagination. She lights the spark that sets him dreaming. She gives him illusions for his dreams. And no woman can have a greater power over a man, particularly if she is trying to win him, than to appeal to the dreamer in him. She is the one he thinks of and yearns for.

"Every woman has it within her to be glamorous, to weave a subtle air of mystery about her. It is as much a part of her as her femininity.

"But a woman can hardly be glamorous when she is restlessly in search of excitement and thrills, when she drinks and swears and talks as rough as man, or when she pursues him. She will hardly capture his imagination with her passion for frankness, for analyzing herself to him and for parading forth all her reactions, so that the first time he meets her she is an open book to him.

"THE woman who would be glamorous must know how not to give too much, how to keep a man guessing, wondering and dreaming. She must know how to command subtly, so that he feels it a privilege to do things for her and becomes her willing slave.

At right, Madame Recamier, mentioned as one who remained beautiful far beyond middle age



"Women often complain that men are indifferent and not a bit romantic. But they forget that it is the woman who must inspire romance, who must inspire beauty in love-making. If she gives a man a cigarette or shares her flask with him, he is hardly inspired to romantic homage.

"Women no longer know how to intrigue men or how to manage them. The women who have been successful with men have always been those who have studied them and known how to handle them. The great charmers of history who have swayed empires and conquered kingdoms gained their power because they understood men and could satisfy all sides of their nature. They knew how to enchant men and keep them enchanted. This is no small accomplishment when you consider that they had to deal with tired, bored and satiated Kings.

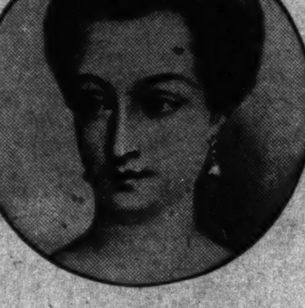
"YOU will find that the men who are fascinating to women do not get that way by accident, either. Study and observation and experience have given them an understanding of woman, her emotional nature and her needs. They have made it a business to know women just as a musician his music or even a baseball player his game.

"You will often hear a young girl say, 'All the attractive, interesting men are married.' She finds the man attractive only because, through marriage, he has learned more about women. He is more aware of the things that please them. But most men do not have this knowledge before marriage, unless they have made a deliberate study of women.

"In former days, women, because they had so much to gain from pleasing men, cultivated an infinite variety and were able to adapt themselves to the moods of men. Now one rarely meets a woman who is responsive this way; who has the many feminine talents and the deep understanding to hold a man's love."

THE artist brought out in the course of the interview that one of the things he admires about Mrs. Barclay is this "infinite variety" that she possesses and that makes her an interesting personality. It is partly her intuition, he believes, and partly because she has a fine analytical mind.

Helene Barclay, it seems, measures up in many other ways to her famous husband's ideal. The odd part of it is that for years he had been painting and drawing her type before he had ever seen her. When he met her a few years ago at a social gathering, he at once recognized her as the model he had long been using. She has since posed for the majority of his drawings and sculpture work.



Diane de Poitiers, another French beauty referred to by the famous artist whose loveliness did not fade with youth

Mrs. Barclay is a tall, slender woman, with lovely red-gold hair. Her eyes are large and of a lavender blue, with long black lashes. The most striking things about her are her chiseled, clear-cut features and flawless skin. She has a wide range of expression and can look the innocent angel to the shrewd schemer. She has an unusual ability to wear clothes, is an accomplished musician and sportswoman and an actress as well.

"I have never known a woman who was truly beautiful," said Mr. Barclay, "who did not have intelligence and a marked talent of some kind. This idea of 'beautiful but dumb' is ridiculous. You can have prettiness and dumbness, but real beauty goes far deeper than the surface. It has mentality behind it.

"Perfect features alone do not make a woman beautiful. It is only when her face is illumined with intelligence, vivacity and understanding that it shines with a transcendent beauty. That is why a woman who has homely features, but who radiates charm and understanding, is often more attractive than the woman with pretty features.

"Beauty is the reflection of the qualities of mind and heart. It doesn't fade with youth, but enhances with time. Brilliant women like Madame Recamier, Diane de Poitiers and Ninon de Lenclos were beautiful far beyond middle age. If it had been merely a surface loveliness, it would not have lasted.

"I believe that the chief reason why our women keep their looks longest today is because they have so many interests to stimulate their mind and keep them mentally alert. The girl who is dumb, or who never uses her mind for any worth-while purpose, is the one whose looks quickly fade.

"On the other hand, the woman who develops her mind comes into great beauty and power when she reaches full maturity. It has never been the young girl who has been famed for her beauty and ruled great men. It has been women past their youth."

WHEN we go through history, we find that Cleopatra was past 30 when Mark Antony fell in love with her, Aspasia married Pericles when she was 36 and the lovely Diane de Poitiers was 37 when she was adored by the young King Henry II. And not a few of these famed women continued to win the admiration of men by the great charm of their character and mind and youthful spirit even when they had reached the age of 70.

However, there are women whom we think are beautiful, merely because of the illusion they create. It may be, as the artist pointed out, their distinctive way of dressing and their exquisite grooming.

"One of the reasons why a woman so frequently looks nondescript even though she dresses well," he said, "is because she follows the styles of other women. She is afraid to develop herself, afraid to pioneer.

"And yet many women are considered beautiful only because they achieve distinction and individuality in dress. They are always incredibly chic and perfect in every detail.

"It is rare that a woman is beautiful without a good carriage. Study the beautiful women on the stage and screen and see whether they do not move with grace. Here again I would say that it is the intelligent woman, the one who thinks and feels more, who generally carries herself well.

"While a woman's bearing and walk disclose a good deal about her, there are other things which give away her secrets. The nose shows what her background is, the eyes what she would like to accomplish, and the mouth what her private past has been.

"Hands express emotions and spirits. With a clasp or pat or finger play, they can say more than words. They are an index of habits and of character. Graceful, expressive hands that gleam like jewels can be as appealing as a beautiful face or form. Many a woman has been distinguished for her beautiful hands alone.

"A natural, feminine manner can add a great deal to a woman's charm. A man feels more comfortable in her presence, more himself. He will want to seek her companionship again and again. Her femininity is soothing to him. It is the biggest allure of woman—the eternal charm that she has for him."

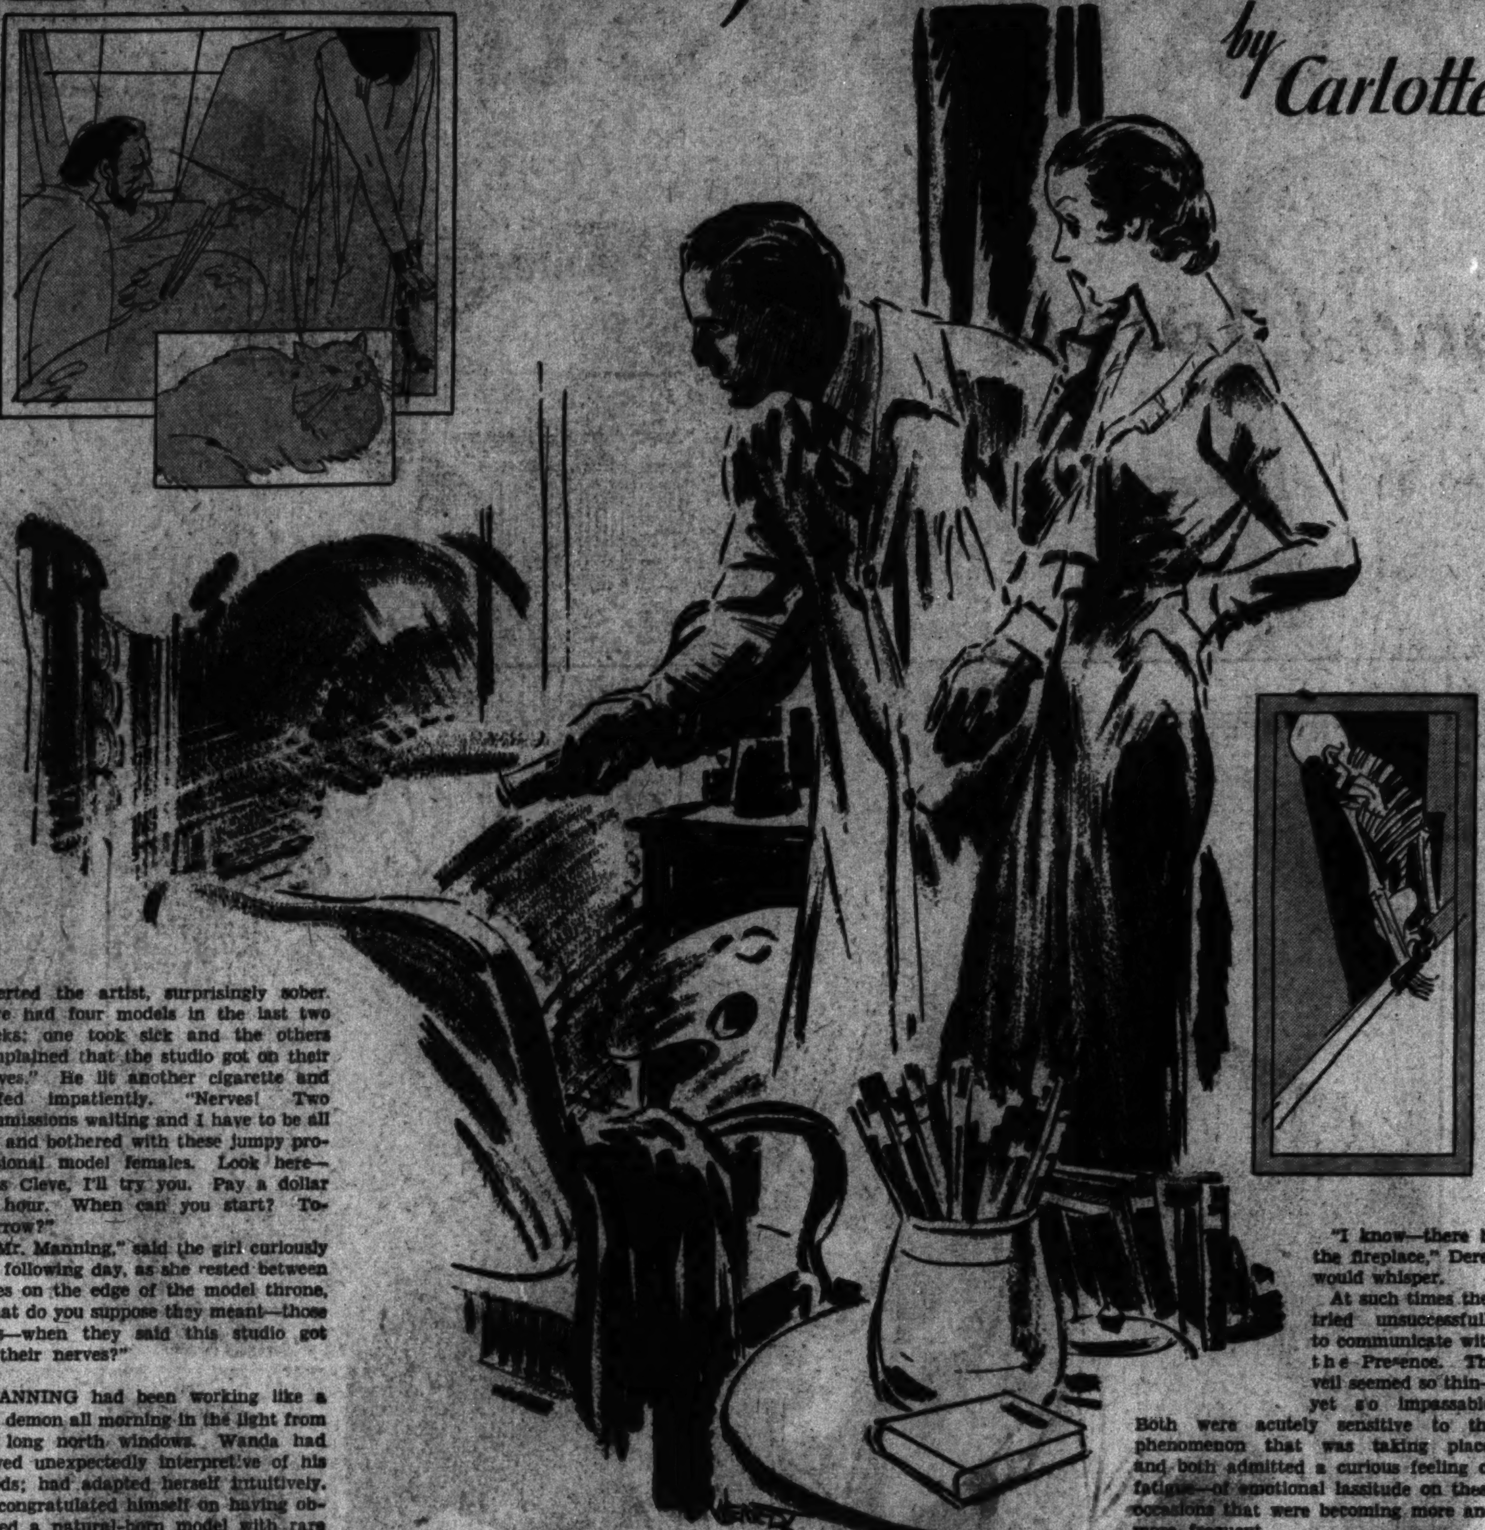
The GHOST of STUDIO 13

by Carlotte Wilma Fox

Here Is a Mystery Story With Plenty of Excitement and a Happy Ending for a Young Artist and His Model



Wanda rushed to his side and together they pushed the ponderous wood apart until the aperture was wide enough to enter. Derek grabbed his flashlight

WANDA CLEVE found an isolated bench in the park where the pathway curved. She sat down, tucked cold feet under her young body for warmth and read the queer advertisement again.

WANTED—Young girl to pose for professional artist; must have steady nerves and be absolutely without superstition; good pay to intelligent applicant. Apply Studio 13, Old Bond Building.

Why, that wasn't far. Just across the park and four blocks west. During her two months' search for a job—any job—the girl had come to know the devious highways and byways of this bewildering city.

Wanda's introspection told her that her country-bred young body had never boasted acquaintance with—nerves. As for superstition—well, hadn't she often walked under ladders without heart failure? Hadn't she disregarded every misfortune-threatening "endless chain" letter she had ever received from some misguided friend?

But what had superstition to do with the art of being a successful model? Wanda suddenly determined to find out.

Old Bond Building was in a neighborhood of rather impecunious boarding houses. It had once been the palatial home of the wealthy Bond family. Now it had been converted into studio quarters for artists, writers and illustrators who were enamored of its quaint, high ceilings and airy rooms.

Wanda knocked gently on the heavy, oaken door on the ground floor which bore a metal-framed card with "Number 13. Derek Manning" printed on it.

The tall young man with the shock of crisp dark hair who opened the door looked at Wanda keenly as she stood hesitatingly on the threshold. His hazel eyes took in the worn blue coat suit, shabby shoes and mended gloves; noted, too, the honey-colored hair that curled damply under a hat that had seen much service.

"Come in," he invited, before she could speak. "You came about my advertisement?"

"Yes, I thought——"

"Sit down," he said again abruptly, indicating a chair facing him. He sent another investigating glance at the sweet, worried face lighted by a pair of oversize brown eyes flecked with amber. "You're not a professional model?"

"No," she answered honestly. "You—the advertisement didn't say, you know."

"That's all right. I left it out purposely. I don't especially want an experienced girl." He lit a cigarette leisurely.

Wanda's eyes were roving around the big, disorderly room. There were recently done canvases on the faded walls, as well as some fine etchings.

ABOVE the old-fashioned cavernous fireplace hung, in the best light the room afforded, a full-length study of an exquisitely formed woman chained by each supple wrist to an iron ring in the stone wall back of her. The delicate tracery of veins that blended beneath the ivory flesh tones was marvelously well done. Soot-black hair rippled from the upflung head over the perfect body. The frenzied, baffled eyes were so lifelike and the unmistakable agony of soul so apparent in the tragic, despairing face that Wanda quivered sensitively in vicarious sympathy.

Derek Manning's gaze followed hers as it dwelt, fascinated now, on the barbaric necklace of blood-red rubies that encircled the slender column of the throat and hung below its base like crimson drops of fire on the artfully tinted flesh.

"Wonderful thing, isn't it?" said he, appreciatively. "It must be the work of a master artist. I found it carefully hidden, with a package of smaller pictures, all of the same model, under the floor here just after I leased this studio a year ago."

"What uncanny eyes," whispered the girl, retreating to another chair. "They seem to follow me. That's curious."

"It's only a trick of the light," said Manning, reassuringly. "Sultan's eyes are like that sometimes." He indicated a huge maltese cat which had been asleep beside the fireplace, but which now stalked majestically across the room to rub against his legs.

"Oh!" the girl ran and gathered the creature up into her arms and sat down again, cuddling him. He purred contentedly. "Isn't he gorgeous?"

"He seems to have adopted you," observed Derek, mildly amazed. "He never has taken much to strangers." He looked thoughtful. "Would you like to try posing for me, Miss——?"

"I'm Wanda Cleve," said the girl, eagerly. "Do you really think I'd do?"

"I believe you would if you'd stick," asserted the artist, surprisingly sober. "I've had four models in the last two weeks; one took sick and the others complained that the studio got on their nerves." He lit another cigarette and puffed impatiently. "Nerves! Two commissions waiting and I have to be all hot and bothered with these jumpy professional model females. Look here—Miss Cleve, I'll try you. Pay a dollar an hour. When can you start? Tomorrow?"

"Mr. Manning," said the girl curiously the following day, as she rested between poses on the edge of the model throne, "what do you suppose they meant—those girls—when they said this studio got on their nerves?"

MANNING had been working like a demon all morning in the light from the long north windows. Wanda had proved unexpectedly interpretive of his moods; had adapted herself intuitively. He congratulated himself on having obtained a natural-born model with rare intelligence. He had made several preliminary sketches of the girl's downbent head, with the sunlight caught in the luxuriant amber hair. She was glad that she had never bobbed it.

The painter looked at her quizzically in answer to her inquiry as he stroked Sultan.

"I might as well be frank with you, Miss Cleve," he said slowly. "Ever since I moved into this studio queer things have happened. First, I uncovered that marvelous picture when I stepped on a loose board in the floor. I admired it immensely. It haunted me until I hung it over the mantel. It seemed to fit in there. Then, quite suddenly one night, Sultan appeared. I had locked the door when I went out, but he was here making himself very much at home when I returned. I've never found out where he came from. Cats are queer beasts."

"They have peculiar instincts which humans can't fathom," offered Wanda, wisely. "What else happened?"

"Nothing I can put into words," said Derek. "I'm a normal, healthy sort of a fellow, but when I'm alone here sometimes—well—I'd swear I'm not alone; that there's an invisible something present. It seems to beg—to urge—to command—it's incredibly powerful." He laughed ruefully. "You think that's all baloney, I suppose. But that's why I wanted a girl with a level head on her shoulders."

Wanda's eyes were serious. "I understand. I'm a practical sort of an individual myself. Some people believe in the unseen—maybe they hypnotize themselves—I don't know."

"I've never peeped about this to any one," went on Derek, "but—you—well, this sounds like a bromidiom, I guess—but you're different, and I've a feeling you won't be scared away like the others."

"I'm going to stick," asserted Wanda, suddenly. She came over to him and they shook hands solemnly in silent comradeship.

There came a day that appeared to have been lost out of Nature's Indian summer flock and had just turned up feeling quite strange and out of place. A peevish wind moaned. Clouds raced fitfully across the sky. By midafternoon the changeling was revealed in its true colors. Lightning flashed freakishly and the warm air seemed charged with dynamite. A storm was brewing.

Derek was working feverishly. Wanda, tired but uncomplaining, had sensed his absorbed mood. He was painting her as "Marguerite" at her spinning wheel, with the curling, blonde hair in two thick ropes over her shoulders. The picture had reached a critical stage. The artist was brushing in his colors with swift, tense strokes while the light was rapidly fading.

UTTERLY without warning an icy chill smote the girl. The wild rose color left her face. The amber eyes glazed for a fraction of a second. Not a muscle in the slender body moved; the pose was held courageously intact. Only Wanda's quivering lips betrayed her.

"Derek," she whispered, out of the suddenly ominous silence, "something is behind me. I can feel its breath on my neck."

Derek's brushes and palette clattered to the floor. He sprang up. "Look at Sultan," he exclaimed, "he sees something."

The cat's enormous gray-green eyes were dilated. Every hair along his spine stood erect. His feet carried him backward with a queer rotating movement. He spit and snarled as if at some ancient enemy. There was a lurid flash of lightning, thunder and then a torrent of angry rain dashed against the big, old-fashioned windows. The storm had broken in all its fury.

DEREK caught a shaking Wanda in his arms as she tottered weakly from the model stand. He placed her gently in a chair and brought her smelling salts.

"I'm sorry—the pose—I didn't mean——" she faltered.

"Don't think of that," said Derek. "There was something. I felt it myself. I suppose," somberly, "you'll quit now."

"I'm not quitting—yet," she told him sturdily, with flashing eyes. "I'm not afraid of this—ghost. Derek, I think it's a woman—I don't know why—but I do." Afterward Wanda was amazed at the conviction she had uttered.

Sultan jumped up into her lap and stared into her eyes with curious concentration. It was as if he understood.

The autumn days passed rapidly. A forgotten package which Wanda was sending to her mother had brought the young people back to the studio one night after attending a concert. A glorious moon was riding high in the sky. The music had stimulated them both and they were laughing together in wholesome enjoyment.

Suddenly, coming clearly through the open transom of the door, they were stopped short in amazement to hear the pleading, tired voice of a woman.

"Please, Adrian—don't make me pose again—not that way—I'm so—tired."

Silence. Wanda clutched Derek's arm, scarcely breathing. Who could be in the studio?

The low voice, strained, unnatural, began again. "No—no, I won't, I tell you. I hate you—oh—you're cruel to chain me like this—always—always the chains — so you can paint this living death of mine."

A long sobbing breath while the two outside stood rigid, unable to move hand or foot.

"I'm going mad, Adrian—imprisoned here so long—so long—you're a monster—inhuman—don't look at me—I know I've no will left of my own—but—my diary—it'll be found—I've written it all down—and hidden it."

THERE was a horrible hysterical laugh—then a shriek, "You've killed me—ah-a-amy heart——," a low, gasping cry—then a gurgle as if life blood ebbed away. A low sigh and—silence.

Derek flung himself out of the trance that had held him like a vise. He tore open the door—rushed in. Wanda followed, with stiff limbs, behind.

The studio was empty.

Sultan stood—a militant figure—on a table with his diamond green eyes fixed steadily on the picture.

"Wanda, this is getting serious. Do you suppose a murder has been committed here? You heard——" Derek was a little white around the lips and his hands shook as he lit the lamp.

"I'm sure of it," said the girl in a low voice. "Some horrible thing has taken place here. We've got to discover what."

"But how?" The artist made a helpless gesture with his expressive hands.

"Have you ever connected that painting with—with what we've experienced?"

"Good heavens, no. Still—it's possible——"

"It's more than possible—it's probable," asserted the girl. "Could there be a hidden diary—a record? That voice—I'll never forget it—'I've written it all down,'" repeated Wanda, in an awed tone.

"We'll have a look tomorrow," decided Derek, "but tonight I'm going to take you home—you're worn out with all this excitement."

A systematic search the following day revealed no trace of a mysterious record in writing. The wholly prosaic morning sun streamed into the windows of Studio Thirteen and seemed to laugh in wholesome fashion at the idea of anything supernatural in the air. Wanda wondered if the voice had been part of a fanciful dream.

But it was destined that the young people were not to forget. A strange presence persistently haunted the studio. They knew it was there, brooding—waiting—seeking—urging. A faint, eerie sigh in the silence — Sultan's immediately quickened perception. A faint rustle as if something passed. A vague shadow like an optical illusion that was gone in a split second. The clank of a chain for which neither Wanda nor Derek could account.

"She's here—again," from Wanda, her lips barely forming the words.

"I know—there by the fireplace," Derek would whisper.

At such times they tried unsuccessfully to communicate with the Presence. The veil seemed so thin—yet so impassable. Both were acutely sensitive to the phenomenon that was taking place, and both admitted a curious feeling of fatigue—of emotional lassitude on these occasions that were becoming more and more frequent.

Strangely, too, Derek's genius burned like that of the masters of old. His brush seemed inspired, his zeal tireless. It was true that life had taken on a new meaning for the occupant of Studio Thirteen, for Derek was in love with his model.

THE secret of the studio was kept inviolate by unspoken consent. Their own drama was part of the future, but they were significantly aware of growing mutual love.

Oddly enough it was Sultan whose playful gymnastics revealed the hiding place of the vainly sought diary.

Springing eagerly for the crimson, woolly ball which Derek had tossed him, the lithe weight of the cat fell suddenly against the inlaid tiles surrounding the fireplace. One of them broke and fell to the floor. A square, dusty cavity filled with cobwebs was revealed.

Something yellowish gleamed inside. Curiously Derek reached in and pulled forth a tiny, discolored book with a leather cover. His sixth sense warned him instantly that he held in his hand the key to the studio disturbances.

Three minutes later his excited voice came over the wire to Wanda. "Hurry right over, darling, I've found the diary."

"Oh, Derek, I was just going to call you," came her reply. "I dreamed last night that we had found it in one of the hollow tiles in the fireplace."

Derek dropped the receiver. "Well, I'll be hanged—you're psychic—that's what—a medium—or something."

"Don't be silly," said Wanda, "and don't read a word of that diary until I arrive." She hung up and, dazed, Derek sat down to await her coming. She was there before he could pull his scattered senses together.

"I am Rosalie Cobb," the faintly penciled lines, dated ten years back, began abruptly. "My father is Quentin Cobb, owner of the Cobb Steel Mills in Pittsburgh. I met Adrian Bond while I was abroad. My father never approved of him because he was an artist. So we ran away and came here to the old home of the Bonds. I loved him madly and he has dominated me completely because of that."

"Rosalie Cobb?" ejaculated Derek. "Why, that's the case that kicked up such a rumpus in the newspapers ten years ago when I was a cub reporter on the Daily Globe. The girl disappeared like a will-o'-the-wisp in the night. No trace. Detectives combed the whole country. Not the shadow of a clue. It was one of the most baffling missing-girl cases on record."

Wanda excitedly seized the book from his hand and bent over the penciled lines, reading aloud.

Later entries told of Rosalie Cobb's shame that Adrian Bond had never married her. Of her growing fear of him. Of the hypnotic influence he exercised over her. Of his violent rages when she refused to pose for him.

"He whipped me today with a strap because I couldn't hold the pose he wanted. If he only wouldn't compel me to look at him, I could defy him—but his eyes master me—I must obey—and he—makes me do—oh! such unspeakable things—he is a devil."

"He never lets me go out alone," another entry testified. "He watches me closely on our walks and drives so that I cannot escape him. The one woman servant in this lonely house is deaf and dumb. I am friendless and this has gone on for months. I believe I am losing my reason."

DEREK stood up and began to pace the room, head bent, lost in thought. Wanda's golden-brown eyes filled with tears.

"What a proper fiend that bird must have been," marveled the painter. "Quentin Cobb, the girl's father, offered fabulous rewards for information, or for her return, alive or dead."

"I have found a friend," resumed Wanda, slowly deciphering the most illegible scrawl. "He is a half-starved maltese cat. He seems to pity me. Adrian hates him and kicks him out when he wanders into the studio. But at night I can stroke him with the hand that is not chained to the bed. It comforts me. He is something alive—something that understands my degradation and despair."

"A cat—a maltese cat," gasped Wanda. "How strange that Sultan——"

"This stuff is all too deep for me," said Derek impatiently, "can you make out any more, Wanda?"

"Yes—wait." She turned a page. "This is dated a week later."

"I am convinced that Adrian is insane," she read. "A man so cruel, so cunning, so vicious—must be mad. I know that I'm doomed; I know that he means to kill me sooner or later—but—he keeps me posing—posing—posing—hours and hours at a time. He seems to paint my every thought. He is starving and torturing me so that he can put my sufferings on canvas. The picture—with the rubies—the last of the Bond jewels, fascinates him—yet he is never satisfied—he does it over and over——"

Wanda hurried on, her voice tense. "For the last two nights he's shut me up in the little secret room back of the fireplace. It is a stone, cell-like place with no windows—just a grating—he presses on a corner of the mantel. It swings open. He threw a knife at me last night. It barely missed my heart. Perhaps the next time——"

The diary ended as abruptly as it had begun.

"By Jove," Derek was on his feet, his sensitive fingers exploring the heavily carved corners of the mantel. "Yes, there's a sort of a crack here," he exulted as he touched the side away from the windows.

Wanda rushed to his side. Their combined strength slowly pushed the reluctantly separating, ponderous wood apart until an aperture was visible large enough for a man's body to enter. Derek snatched his flashlight from a drawer in the table.

WHEN Derek crawled back through the hole, his clothes were covered with dust, his face gray and his eyes filled with the horror he had seen.

"There's a woman's skeleton down there," he told Wanda, briefly. "The rubies of the picture are around its neck," he shuddered. "The bones of some small animal—probably a cat—are there, too. Wanda, let's get out of here—the police—they should know at once."

At police headquarters there was a flurry to secure old records. Newspaper files were searched. The old Bond house stood in the pitiless glare of sensational publicity as the almost forgotten facts in the Rosalie Cobb case were brought again into the limelight. Wanda's and Derek's pictures adorned the front pages of newspapers; facsimiles of the diary were printed. Detectives and reporters worked overtime gathering evidence to piece the story together.

"That fellow, Adrian Bond," reported Special Detective Appleby, assigned by the chief to dig up details, "is in the State Asylum for the Incurably Insane. Been there nearly ten years. Crazy as a loon. Always was erratic and goofy about painting pictures. Just fell short of bein' a bloomin' genius, but took to drinking—and women. He was the last of the Bonds—threw a fortune away."

"Wasn't he suspected when the girl disappeared?" asked Derek, who sat, with Wanda, in the chief's office.

"Yeah, but he produced alibi letters proving that the girl had broken with him a long while before. Must have been diabolically clever."

"By the way," said the chief, "there's a reward of ten thousand still up for the discovery of Rosalie Cobb, alive or dead. Old Quentin Cobb died some years ago, but his will instructs the trustees of his estate to keep this money posted. You youngsters are entitled to it. I'm going to see that you get it. You'll need it to start housekeeping with." He grinned at them, for he had seen how it was with Derek and Wanda.

The artist was thoughtful as the two left headquarters.

"There's one thing that puzzles me, and always will," he said. "What has become of Sultan? He's disappeared as strangely as he came."

"Maybe he never existed," said Wanda. "Who knows?"

MANY FRUITFUL TOPICS INVITE OUR CONTRIBUTORS

Inauguration and Career Numbers And Washington's Birthday at Hand

Dear Post Boys and Girls: The Editor of The Junior Post was very proud this week to hear the editor of The Washington Post praise the drawings the boys and girls contributed to the St. Valentine Day number.

Ding-How, who happened to be seated at his desk at the time, heard it, too, and pranced about and bow-wow-wowed until everybody in The Post came running to see what all the excitement was about.

Only one more day to get your inauguration edition contributions in. Mail them today, for we all want to have a part in this special edition, and The Junior Post always does its part.

The career number to be published on March 5 is going to be a great number, too. Remember to write about careers you would like to follow and what you think are the most useful careers for the advancement of the human race. You can also write about the careers of great men and women and the effect they have had on the world.

The Junior Post boys and girls have always had a great sense of civic responsibility and the editor is delighted to notice this trait in many of the drawings, poems and stories sent in for the inauguration and the career numbers.

Wednesday will be the birthday of George Washington, and once again we will all pay tribute to the Father of His Country. Of course, all The Post boys and girls know about this great American. They did their part nobly in making the Bicentennial year of the birth of Washington a most notable one.

Don't forget that there is a prize for the best eyewitness story and drawing of the events in Washington on the 4th of March. These must, of course, be of something you have seen yourself; something apart from the general news as the reporters of newspapers will see it. Little incidents that occur in the crowd waiting to see the parade with you on the sidewalk, the stands or from some window. Of course, The Junior Post never publishes stories that are unkind or will hurt someone's feelings, or are not clean and wholesome.

With so many new people in Washington this late winter and spring, because of the change of administration, The Junior Post writers will quite naturally write about the places of interest in our city. This will be for the benefit of the newcomers and also to encourage the boys and girls who already live here to appreciate the opportunities of seeing the sights of Washington which other boys and girls come hundreds of miles to see.

Don't forget March 17 is St. Patrick's Day. So get to work on some pictures and stories for The Junior Post of March 12. The Junior Post has to go to press the Monday before it is issued, so be sure to get your contributions in early enough.

Members of the Deer Family.

The red deer is found only in Europe. It is 4 feet high at the shoulder and 7 feet long. The antlers project upward and onward.

The Virginia deer is found mostly everywhere in the United States. It has the widest range of any deer in the world. It has a bushy wedge-shaped tail.

The Columbian black-tailed deer is smaller than the Virginia deer. It is found along the Pacific Coast. The antlers vary in shape, and some of the deer have Y-shaped antlers.

The mule deer is larger than the Virginia deer, and it is very handsome. It can be easily recognized because of its large ears. Its home is in the Badlands and the foothills of the Rocky Mountain region.

The Chinese water deer is a small one, and it has no antlers, but long tusks.

The muntjac is found in India, and looks almost like a pig. It has short legs and neck, and they are not good runners.

Her Card.

A knock at the door, an eager step
To greet the postman full of pep.
"Good morning Miss Jane," to the face wreathed in smiles,
"Here's something for you that's come many miles."

"Oh goody," she said as away she ran
To see what had been brought by the good postman.
It's open and look at those eyes shine,
A card for her, it was Valentine!

She read the first line, her breath came fast;
Then came a blush, as the second she passed.
As she finished, she wondered who could be so true;
A disappointed sigh, it was signed "Guess Who?"

Valentine.

'Tis only a card with a bright, red heart,
And cupids pictured there,
With a verse that I'm hoping will impart
How much I really care.

Though it's a loving token that I send,
Though, pretty, it may be;
Yet, it does not half explain nor extend
What my heart says to me.

So tonight, my dear, at the usual time
A visit I will pay,
And tell you quite another valentine
In a much better way.

The Capture of Trenton.

While Washington and his brave soldiers were struggling their way through the swirling ice cakes of the Delaware River a fierce storm of sleet and hail was raging. When they reached the opposite side they began their steady march to Trenton, 9 miles away. As they neared the Hessians' camp a messenger bore the news that the enemy was approaching.

Here they started a treacherous battle. Washington was victorious. He lost 1 man while he captured 1,000 of the enemy. This was Washington's Christmas gift to America.

The Pets' Corner

Edited by Ding-How of Hydegree.
(Mascot of The Junior Post.)

Bow! wow! wow! I have been so busy all week arranging the details of my welcoming committee for Meggie Scottie Roosevelt who is coming to Washington with a great blare of trumpets and many bow, wow, wows on March 4. Of course, the parade has been arranged by some one else all down the Avenue, for the Editor of The Junior Post writes about character and accomplishments and the price of good red beefsteak. Any way Meggie will know that all the pets view the parade as a great celebration in her honor, even if Meggie is too busy with affairs of state to be in the parade.

I hear that Meggie has a brand new hair ribbon of the new shade of Eleanor blue and I went down street to buy a new necktie of the same color. Meggie believes in woman's rights, I understand, and perhaps will tell the pets all about it. Any way I think she will have enough to do looking over the situation at the White House for the first few weeks at least.

Mr. and Mrs. Squirrel, who live on White House Square, have started on their spring cleaning already, so to be ready for their new neighbors, and the whole pigeon family is cooing and cooing and ruffling their plumage with the spirit of welcome. Of course, most of them feel sad because Mrs. Hoover is going away. She took such a deep interest in their well-being. I guess Meggie will follow them about a bit, though, and will soon understand their place in the executive world.

Mr. and Mrs. White House Owl look very wise these days and hold hooting meetings to talk over the march of events every night in the tree town hall near the hollow in the tree which has been occupied by their family for generations. Little Johnny Owl says that his great-great-grandfather or something like that saw the arrival of the John Adamses, the first President's family to occupy the White House. That is the reason the Owl family always looks so knowing as they gaze down from their lofty perches on the new Presidents and their families. Of course, the White House Owls are rather small as a family, but what they have in their wise old heads, bow, wow, wow!

Mr. Tweet Canary says he knows a thing or two himself as he puts his head on one side and lets out one of his mysterious ripples of song. Mr. Tweet does find out a lot for a stay-at-home. Mike Great Dane says he is going to investigate the situation from March 4 on. Daisy and Spider are determined to see just who is who in the scheme of things in the National Capital. They say they will tell me. An editor knows every thing, bow, wow, wow, wow!

I hope I get invited to the White House to eat when Meggie gets there. I guess they have roast beef some times, but, of course, the food is very little part of the sights I will see.

Dear Ding How: I have never written to the paper before. My mistress reads The Junior Post to me every Sunday. I enjoy it very much. I am a strong airedale dog, brown in color. My name is Prince. My mistress has taught me lots of tricks. You had better believe I enjoy doing them. I think your picture was lovely.

Always,
PRINCE.

I Love to Go Wading.

I love to go wading, in the waters so bright,
To see the deep reflection of the sun and its light;
To see the pretty shells, and to chase little fishes,
To listen to the water, and hear it when it swishes;
To splash the water all about me,
To get all wet and laugh with glee.

I love to go wading, and race in the water,
To make believe I were a sea king, and some sea monster carried off my daughter,
To make believe I went out and fought for her,
To think I did not give up until I had killed the monster,
Then I took her to my palace and said to her, I shall never leave you,
And then to remember it was not true;
To find myself playing in the waters again,
To be running and skipping and what next then.

George Washington

George Washington was born at Bridges Creek, Va., on February 22, 1732. His father died when George was not quite 11 years old. His boyhood and education were different from those of the other boys. He learned to read and write in a school kept by the sexton of the parish church. Through his brother, Lawrence, he made the acquaintance of Lord Thomas Fairfax, who held enormous grants of land in Virginia beyond the Blue Ridge. At the age of 16, George entered his employ as land surveyor.

At 21 he was made major of the Virginia Militia, and was intrusted by Gov. Dinwiddie with a message to a French post, 600 miles distant. He and his men had to cross unexplored mountains, and through trackless forests infested with wild Indians. Washington narrowly escaped drowning when crossing a flooded river, but he accomplished his mission with success.

In the latter stages of war Washington was the commander in chief of all the Virginia forces.

In 1758 he inherited the estate of Mount Vernon from his brother, Lawrence, and soon afterward he married a charming widow, a Martha Dandridge Custis. Washington never had any children of his own and he was devoted to hers.

In 1789 Washington was elected the first President of the United States. He held this office until 1797.

Following his retirement Washington lived the life he loved best—that of a planter—and in 1799 he died. The whole country mourned the loss of their great leader.

John Marshall, later Chief Justice, in moving the resolution of national grief in Congress, quoted words which truly sum up Washington's position in American history: "First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen."

Mrs. Garfield Saves the Fort

Mrs. Garfield was living in the City of Boston with her four children. Often times when men would want to hold meetings they would go in the homes where they could talk without being interrupted. One day the commander came to Mrs. Garfield's home and asked to hold a meeting. Mrs. Garfield gladly told them they could.

Night came. The men appeared at 7 o'clock. The commander told Mrs. Garfield that the meeting would last long and that she might go to bed. At 8:30 every one was in bed but Mrs. Garfield. The meeting went on. Mrs. Garfield went to her room, but couldn't sleep because of the laughing and talking of the men.

She stole silently over to the room, where they were. She peeped in the keyhole. There they sat drinking and laughing. She listened. She heard the commander say, "We will capture the fort tomorrow."

That was enough for her. She ran down the steps as fast as her legs could carry her, slipped out the door and ran down the road.

The fort was three miles away. She finally reached Gen. Washington and warned him.

When morning came the men were well armed. The men came and a big fight took place. The fort was saved—saved by Mrs. Garfield.

Ice Skating.

Betty and Dick were getting ready to go ice skating when the telephone rang. Dick answered it and it was their mother. Mother said, "Dick, you will have to go ice skating some other time. Dad and I are coming home." "All right," said Dick disappointedly. Dick hung up the receiver and told Betty. She was disappointed, too. "I suppose we will have to stay in then," she said. "Of course, we will," said Dick.

Just then the telephone rang again. Betty answered it this time. This time it was dad. He said, "I think you can go skating after all. We went over to Brown's house, and they have invited us to dinner." Betty was so excited she did not know what to say, but at last she said, "All right, good-by."

So Betty and Dick got dressed in a hurry because they thought their parents might change their minds, and they did not want to give them time. At last they were ready and out of the house they went. They walked until they came to the skating pond. Then Dick put Betty's skates on for her. They spent some time here and then returned home feeling very happy they were able to go ice skating.

Winter Jewels.

A million little diamonds
Twinkled on the tree,
And all the little maidens said,
"A jewel, if you please."
But while they held their hands outstretched
To catch the diamonds gay,
A million little sunbeams came
And stole them all away.

Abraham Lincoln.

Abraham Lincoln, the sixteenth President of the United States, was born in Hardin County, Ky., February 12, 1809. When only 9 years old his mother died. It was from her that he inherited a serious temperament, brightened by a spirit of playfulness. Lincoln's schooling was limited indeed, and included among his first reading books are the Bible, Aesop's Fables, Pilgrim's Progress and Washington's Life.

At the age of 20, his father remarried and moved to Sangamon County, Ill., where the former became a rail-splitter. Quite a sight did Lincoln make, 6 feet 4 inches, with his remarkable vein of humor.

Lincoln was admitted to the bar in 1836 and practiced law in Springfield. He married Mary Todd on November 4, 1842, who was a devoted wife, but not his heart's choice. Their marriage was blessed by four sons.

Lincoln, after a two-year term (1847-9) as representative from the Central District of Illinois, returned again to Springfield and the practice of law. He was greatly stirred by the repeal of the Missouri Compromise in 1854 and entered the campaign. It was then that the debate between he and the celebrated Stephen A. Douglas began.

The first debate was held at the State Fair in October, before a vast crowd. The second one took place in Peoria. But the debate between Lincoln and Douglas in 1858 became historical. It was not just a contest between two rivals for a seat in Congress, but a critical time between North and South, when public feeling ran high.

Lincoln was the strongest man in the Republican party, while Douglas was a recognized leader in the Democratic party. Throughout this duel Lincoln kept his temper and treated his opponent with courtesy and fairness. The debate terminated in the election of Douglas as senator, but the far-sighted Lincoln looked ahead to the Presidency.

In May, 1859, after many invitations to speak in various States as a national figure, Abraham Lincoln was nominated and elected on the Republican ticket as President, with Hannibal Hamlin for Vice President.

On leaving for Washington Lincoln was heard to have said that this task was more difficult than any ever devolved on man since the time of Washington, and that he hoped with the aid of Divine Providence to govern his people properly.

All this time the storms of secession had been gathering in the South, which had prepared for war. Finally they broke forth into a bitter civil war of hate and resentment. It was a war to save the Union and not to destroy slavery that had caused the dispute.

On January 1, 1863, the emancipation proclamation freeing the slaves went into effect as a military necessity.

At the Gettysburg dedication Lincoln delivered an address so compact in thought and statement that it has become a classic.

Lincoln was reelected with an overwhelming vote, showing that the people were with him. The war was over, but the rejoicings of the Nation turned to mourning, for Lincoln was shot in Ford's Theater, Washington, on April 14, 1865, by John Wilkes Booth. He lingered unconscious until the next morning, when he died. His remains were buried in Springfield.

Abraham Lincoln's public service and courageous heart gained for him a place in the hearts of his countrymen not second to that of Washington, and in the estimation of many he was and is regarded as the greatest of Americans.

Ideals of Knighthood of Youth Approved in Nation

THE JUNIOR POST AIRSHIP

"I see you have a life of Franklin D. Roosevelt there," said the editor as the pilot placed the book in the flap pocket of the machine so he could tune up for the weekly tour of the world.

"Well, yes," said the pilot. "You see my sister's children ask me so many questions about the new President and other inaugurations that I have to read up in order to be able to answer the barrage of questions. Of course, I find the life of Franklin Roosevelt interesting now because I think we all want to know all we can about the man we are getting ready to give such a rousing welcome to the National Capital on March 4."

"The week-end you should say," said the editor as they flew over Washington. "Because the inaugural committee, the Washington business associations and the people of Washington are trying to make the week-end from Friday to Monday so inviting that our inaugural visitors will remain over the week-end."

"I know," said the pilot. "My sister is going to have guests and they are coming on Friday morning and leaving Monday night, and there is something on the schedule for nearly every hour. We will have to be up with the lark on inauguration day in order to get to our seats in the stands in time for the parade. There are sure to be lots of people before us."

"Well, I guess Mr. Roosevelt will be very fit after his ten-day preinauguration vacation on the bounding deep. I think it was a good idea for him to take a sea trip. Of course, when he came ashore on Wednesday he found a task or two ahead of him in making his final Cabinet selections, and so forth."

"Well, he will find still more when he gets in the White House, for very serious problems confront this country," said the editor. "But patriotic people will help him all they can, just as they helped all other Presidents in the history of the country. I will be interested to hear his first message to Congress at the extra session in April."

"Well, you know," said the pilot, "I suppose the members of Congress do pay just as much attention to what is in a President's message when it is sent to Congress, but somehow it is very impressive to me to have the President himself read it. I used to go when President Wilson read his. The members of the Senate and the House all gathered in the House of Representatives chamber, and the galleries were filled with distinguished men and women, and good Americans besides, who might not have been as distinguished, but were as concerned with the fate of the Nation as those whose names appear in the newspapers frequently."

"Those were great celebrations we had on Sunday in memory of the great Lincoln," said the pilot as they flew over the Lincoln Memorial. "Forty patriotic societies and organizations participated and all the churches held services. I think it is splendid to honor our great men in this way."

Then across the ocean they flew to take in the political situation in France and Germany and note the changes of cabinet which are making newspaper head lines just now. Then on to Roumania.

"There he is, a fine stocky looking youngster, too,' said the pilot as they looked down on the snow clad Sinai region and the handsome winter home of the royal family and saw young Crown Prince Michael having such a good time on skis and never minding a tumble or two but taking the hills and jumps with the zeal of an expert.

As they flew over Ireland they saw the people of the Emerald Isle on their way to cast their votes in the elections. It must be acknowledged that Irish elections are not without excitement. Among the throng of people walking and riding on horse back or in motor cars were many women who have a right to vote in Ireland going to perform their civic duties in old-fashioned donkey carts, the same type that have been used in Ireland for hundreds of years.

Youths Will Not Take More Than Their Deserts

Do not take advantage of other people. Do not demand more than your due. The great knights of history, men and women who had power, were great and were remembered in history as good and just people only in as far as they used their power justly and for the good of the people.

There is no real triumph in achieving just because fortune or circumstances has thrown power or a chance to take advantage in your way.

A great President sent his children to the public schools of Washington and made them make good in the schoolrooms on their own merits, refusing to let them "trade" at all on the exalted position of their father. These boys have all made good in the world, and one of them died in the World War a knightly hero.

No circumstances of birth, wealth or fortune can give you success unless you have the qualities and exercise them that make for success. No one is successful without hard work, their own hard work and not some one else.

Snow.

The silvery flakes are falling,
  The world's adorned in white;
All the ground and houses
  Are dressed for any sight.

The trees, once so bare and ugly,
  Are a sight fit for a queen,
As the flakes keep falling,
  Forming a silvery sheen.

Adams' Administration.

Adams, taking his seat, was not free,
For the political parties began to disagree.
The Democratic Republicans split in two;
They could not see from the same point of view;
Differences in banks broke out anew
And this caused another big stew.
The defeat of the Indians and cheaper land
Made the hardy pioneers form a band,
Which resulted in the settlement of the West;
To secure its friendship the South thought best
To enter into Congress the tariff of 1828.
This they thought would bring debate,
But the North thought this quite fine,
For they saw deep into its design.
With the building of the Erie Canal
  and the Cumberland road,
John Quincy Adams leaves his executive abode.

THE STORY BOOK LADY

"We went to the Zoo yesterday," said Little Jackie as he skated along with the older boys to join the group of the Story Book Lady and the members of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the Knighthood of Youth for the weekly pilgrimage to Story Book Land. "I hope we find some animal books today in Story Book Land."

"So do I," said Little Willie. "Mother buys me animal books. I like them so much. Even the books that are too old for me to read are nice, because I can look at the pictures and can learn to read them easier as I grow older, because I like them so much."

"I think it is nice to read and look at animal books," said the Story Book Lady, when the boys told her how much they wanted to find books about animals. "Let us hope we will find some."

"My grandsons love animals, too," said Mr. Gnome, who keeps the gate of the Fairy Tale Bridge that leads to Story Book Land, as the Story Book Lady, followed by the members of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the Knighthood of Youth, came to the quaint little gate house where Mr. Gnome lives, with his three grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick.

"We will search for some animal stories right away," said the Story Book Lady as they all hurried through the gate which Mr. Gnome held open for them assisted by his three grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick. Mr. Gnome and his three grandsons, Blick, Flick and Little Mick, all stood in a row and made deep bows with their green hats with scarlet feathers on them.

"Of course, of course!" said the Story Book Fairy. "Of course we like animals in Fairy Story Land. I am glad you like them."

"Indeed we do," said the Story Book Lady and the boys and girls of The Junior Post Writers' Club and the Knighthood of Youth. "We like them very very much indeed."

"Oh, and here we are at a real animal book street just as we wanted to be," said Little Hackie as they entered Story Book Land and came to a jungle book street the first thing.

"So we are," said the Story Book Lady. "Let us go in at once. The Story Book Lady put on her magic glasses as she led the way. "Let me see. It is called 'Jungle Book,' and it is the one written by Rudyard Kipling and republished so attractively by Doubleday, Doran & Co., New York. And all the wonderful drawings are by Kurt Wiese, who illustrates so many books we find in Story Book Land. All of us will want to read and look at this."

"Oh and oh," said Eleanor, "I like the 'Jungle Book,' but here is a book by another Eleanor. A book by Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, whose name is Eleanor, too, mother says. Can't we go down this book street, dear Story Book Lady?"

"Of course, we can," said the Story Book Lady, putting on her magic glasses. "We all want to see what the next First Lady of the Land has written for the youth of the land. It is called 'When You Grow Up to Vote.' By Eleanor Roosevelt (Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt), with illustrations by Manning de V. Lee, (Houghton, Mifflin Co., Boston.) This book, we are told, is intended by Mrs. Roosevelt to familiarize 10 and 11 year olds with the functions of national, State and municipal governments."

A Winter Day.

One afternoon on a cold winter day, when the sun shone forth with chilly brightness, after a long storm, two small children, Ruth and Bob, asked leave of their mother to go out and play in the new fallen snow.

As the earth had put on her snow-white robes the elm tree looked as if it were ridged with pearls, while the pine, fir and hemlock wore ermine. Hanging from the trees were icicles which shone like crystals.

Soon another storm came up. After building their snow house, they decided to go inside. Bob went in first, and when Ruth got to the door it caved in. Ruth ran for help and soon rescued Bob.

After this adventure they went into the house and sat before the fire to take away the chill. For a couple of hours they sat by the fire telling jokes, chatting and eating nuts.

When Bob went to the window to see if it had stopped snowing, he saw, in the corner of each window-pane a little mountain of snow. The flowers were buried beneath the bed of snow, and all the little birds had gone to their homes in the sunny South.

When the sun shone on the hard, crisp surface of the snow it sparkled like diamonds. It seemed as if we were living in the fleecy clouds of the heavens.

All the trees have lost their jet black color and are painted white. I think that a winter day is very beautiful. Some people who have bad health, must go to Florida and can not see how clean and peaceful the earth looks. It all looks like a picture just painted.

My Pictureland.

A picture is a lovely place
In which to live.
    I know, for I
Have lived in one today—
The snow lay all about;
The trees' gray blended with
The sky above, so dull and gray,
    And nature—
Nature held full sway.
A silence deep lay all about,
My world was white and still.
Love alone inhabits such a world,
    My pictureland of snow.

DID IT KILL HIM?
BOYS AND GIRLS - MOTHERS AND DADS - WHAT DO YOU THINK? SHOULD CHESTER GO AND VISIT COUSIN CHARLEY ON THAT GREAT BIG RANCH OF HIS? THIS IS THE QUESTION MIN AND ANDY HAVE TO DECIDE - SHALL HE - OR SHALL HE NOT?
GOLLY - I HOPE THEY LET HIM COME -

NOW I WONDER WHAT THAT BUNCH HAVE TO TALK ABOUT TODAY.
DOC'S ALL RIGHT. HE DOES A LOT OF NICE THINGS FOR PEOPLE.
ONLY HE'S SO BULL-HEADED YOU COULDN'T BEND ONE OF HIS IDEAS WITH A STEAM HAMMER.
YES, WHAT HE THINKS IS SO, NO MATTER WHAT.
HE IS SOMEWHAT AWED BY HIS OWN OPINIONS.
MAYBE THAT'S A GOOD QUALITY BUT IT GETS TO BE A NUISANCE SOMETIMES.
THEN HE'S TERRIFICALLY TIGHT. HE CERTAINLY HATES TO LET GO OF A DIME.
SO AVERY THINKS DOC IS TIGHT DOES HE!
YES THAT HANDS ME A LAUGH. AVERY IS SO TIGHT HIMSELF HE CAN'T WINK IF HIS BELT IS TOO TIGHT.
AVERY ISN'T SO BAD ABOUT DOLLARS, BILL. BUT HE'S GOT A PASSION FOR NICKELS.
WHY IF THAT BIRD HAD KIDS HE'D GIVE 'EM NICKELS TO GO TO BED WITHOUT SUPPER AN' CHARGE 'EM DIMES FOR BREAKFAST.
BILL'S A GOOD FELLOW, WALT, BUT HE SURE DOES LIKE TO HEAR HIMSELF TALK.
ALL I'VE GOT AGAINST HIM IS HE ALWAYS GOES AROUND LOOKING LIKE A TRAMP
BUT OL' BILL'S GOOD HEARTED, AVERY. HE'D GIVE YOU THE SHIRT OFF HIS BACK.
HE'S SAFE. NOBODY WOULD WANT IT.
ANYWAY AVERY WILL ALWAYS LISTEN TO YOUR TROUBLES AND IS READY TO GIVE ADVICE.
YES, IF HE DOESN'T HAVE TO GIVE ANYTHING ELSE. THE WAY HE LOOKS YOU WOULDN'T THINK HE HAD PECKS OF BANKNOTES LAID AWAY IN MOTHBALLS.
IT CERTAINLY WOULDN'T HURT HIM TO SPRUCE UP A LITTLE.
THAT'S GOOD, DOC. AVERY WAS JUST RAVING TO ME ABOUT BILL ALWAYS LOOKING LIKE A HOBO
WELL AS FAR AS I'M CONCERNED THEY'RE BOTH RIGHT.
AND THE CIGARS AND TOBACCO THEY SMOKE—TERRIBLE.
I CAN AGREE WITH YOU ON THAT, DOC.
AND THAT PIPE OF DOC'S ISN'T ANY ROSE-GERANIUM. I GET A KICK OUT OF THESE BIRDS RAZZING EACH OTHER BEHIND THEIR BACKS.
OUT WITH IT, BOYS. WHAT'S THE MATTER WITH ME?

IF METHUSELAH HAD STARTED PLAYING SOLITAIRE AS A YOUNG MAN, DEALING A HAND EVERY MINUTE, HE COULD STILL BE PLAYING WITHOUT GETTING THE SAME HAND TWICE!

© McClure Newspaper Syndicate

Dealing night and day, throughout his long life, and right up to the present moment at the rate of one hand a minute or, even at the impossible rate of one hand a second, Methuselah could never have dealt all the possible combinations in a 52-card playing card deck.

Under the laws of probabilities, according to mathematicians, Methuselah would have to deal a hand a second for more than 20,000 years before he turned up, say, the same 13 cards off the top of the deck twice. And then the cards would not be in the same order. By repeating this tedious 20,000 years of dealing about 6,227,020,800 times Methuselah could expect the satisfaction of turning up the same 13 cards in the same order off the top of the deck. This would take a mere 1,200,000,000,000,000 years—and the other 39 cards would still be mixed up.

The mathematics is simple enough, but the total is staggering. To arrive at the number of possible combinations simply multiply 1x2x3x4x5 . . . and so on up to 52 for a full deck—you will get an answer of more than 50 digits. In a poker hand, for instance, you can get the same 5-card hand 120 times without it being dealt to you in the same order. In bridge you can get the same 13-card hand more than 6,000,000,000 times and never get it in the same order.

It is entirely possible that Methuselah would have turned up identical combinations on his first two tries at solitaire—but the chances are that he would still be dealing if he set out to duplicate his first combination.

It is safe to say that all the combinations in a 52-card deck never have been dealt, and, although it is not certain, the chances are that the next time a deck is shuffled and cut at your own bridge table, the cards will be in an order that no deck was ever in before—so if you get a poor hand, you at least have the satisfaction of knowing that you will probably never get that same hand again.
